Pinckney Soft Ball Ball League Scores

Dinkel Team is in First Place. Four Teams are Tied for Second Place. Some Good Games Played Last Week.

Dinkel's team was the only one which was able to win two games in succession and as a consequence he is in undisputed possession of first place. The Kennedy, Devereaux, Roche and Ledwidge teams are tied for second with one victory and one defeat while Smith's team is in last place with two defeats. Smith's team is having trouble getting a lineup as his players have a habit of failing to show up.

JERRY KEATING

Jerry Keating, 66, son of the late John and Katherine Keating, died at the county hospital after a short illness on Saturday, April 30. The body was brought to Swarthout's funeral home and funeral services were held from St. Mary's church Monday morning at 10:00, Rev. Lewis Dion officiating. Burial was in St. Mary's cemetery.

The deceased was born in County Limerick, Ireland and came to this country while a small boy. He was well known in this section and has worked on many farms in Livingston in years gone by.

Gregory Depositors Sign 3 Year Plan

Three Year Moratorium Plan is Adopted at Large Mass Meeting Held There Wednesday Night.

At a meeting held at the Gregory Community Hall last Wednesday night. The depositors of the closed Gregory Bank adopted the three year moratorium plan. The hall was crowded to the doors and many present were forced to stand. Don VanWinkle, former Livingston county prosecutor made the principal address. He said that he had been visited by Fred Howlett, proprietor of the Gregory Bank who had requested him to work out some plan whereby the depositors would be able to get one hundred cents on a dollar or as near that as possible. Mr. VanWinkle stated that he had three plans to propose. One was the bankruptcy plan. In this it would be necessary for a petition to be filed in federal court. The assets of the bank would then be sold and the people paid as much as possible after the costs were taken out. The second plan was the receiver plan which he said was now in effect at the Pinckney Bank. This was similar to the bankruptcy plan except that the petition would be filed in circuit court. Both of the plans would be wasteful and the assets would be sold at a loss, taking no account of local conditions.

The third plan which he submitted was the three year moratorium which provided that the affairs of the bank should be handled by a three man committee to be chosen by the depositors. If this plan was adopted Mr. VanWinkle said he was sure that the depositors would receive a greater share than under the first two plans. Seventy-five per cent of the depositors must sign a three year moratorium agreement if this plan was to be accepted. The reason for the closing of the bank he stated was that the cash on hand had dwindled to $2,600 on account of heavy withdrawals and lack of deposits. There were 210 depositors of the bank. Of these 49 had accounts of $5 and under, 123 had accounts of from $5 to $500 and 38 had accounts of from $500 and up. These thirty-eight had total accounts of over $40,000 or nearly two thirds of the total amount of savings which was $63,000. He suggested that these 38 depositors whose names he read should be appointed a nominating committee to choose the three man committee.

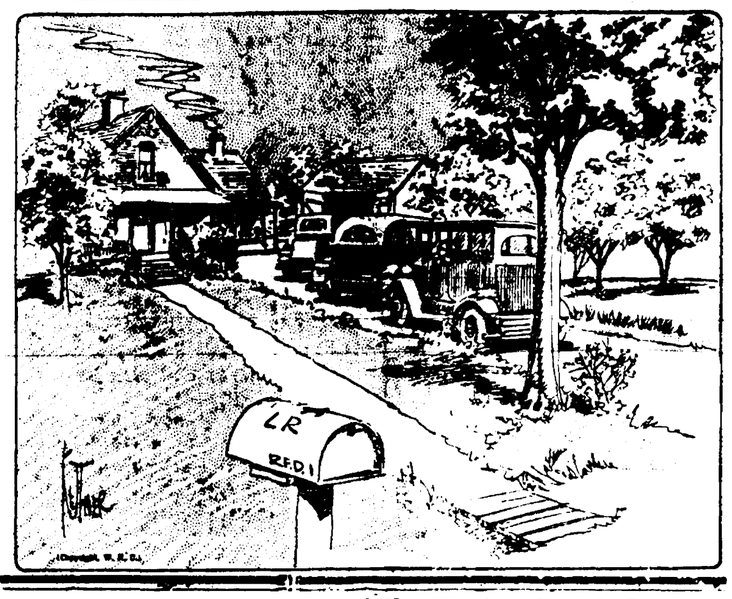
The dramatic moment of the meeting occurred here when Mr. VanWinkle produced deeds from Mr. Howlett and his wife conveying all his property to the committee. This included two farms, the bank and post office building, 40 acres of Florida land and a one third interest in other real estate in Unadilla township. The total value of this was about $20,000 and added to the assets of the bank made a combined assets total of $87,000. The other assets are notes, mortgage, and corporation bonds.

Mr. VanWinkle then called for a vote on the adoption of the plan. Wm. McRobbie made a motion that the three year moratorium plan be adopted and Frank Birnie seconded the motion. A rising vote was taken on it, which carried unanamously not a vote being cast against it. A motion was then made that the 38 depositors whose combined accounts totaled over $40,000 be appointed a nominating committee to select the three committee men. This also carried. They then retired and returned in a short time announcing that they had selected as committee men, Chas. Runciman, supervisor of Unadilla, Wm. McRobbie, Unadilla merchant, and T. H. Howlett, Gregory hardware man. Those nominated were overwhelmingly confirmed by a rising vote. The depositors were then asked to step forward and sign the three year agreement. 2 tables were kept busy for an hour or so receiving signatures. It was announced that all who had accounts of $5 or less would be paid in full when the first dividend was declared.

A time will be set soon for depositors to file claims. Mr. Fred Howlett was called on for remarks and was loudly applauded when he thanked the depositors for their courtesy and confidence. Following this the assembly broke up.

We have been informed that 88 per cent of the depositors have now signed the three year agreement.

Mother's Day



Depositors May File Claims Soon

Depositors Will Be Notified Soon When to File Claims

We are informed by Charles Monroe, receiver for the Pinckney State Bank that a time will be set soon for those who had deposits in the bank to file claims against the institution. Mr. Monroe was appointed temporary receiver. At the end of thirty days his appointment will be made permanent. A. H. Murphy will remain as his assistant for several months until the affairs of the bank are got in shape. Quite a little money has been collected on notes, and one stockholder, C. H. Kennedy, has paid his assessment on $500 worth of bank stock. The combined commercial and savings deposits of the bank at the time of closing were $153,000 and the total assets were $218,000. The latter were in bonds, notes and real estate mortgages.

A group of Pinckney business men conferred with Don VanWinkle, attorney for the receiver, at Howell last Friday, relative to reoganizing the bank. We will have some information to give out on this later as the receiver has not as yet completed his report. The bonds are deposited in the First National Bank of Detroit for safe keeping and it was necessary for him to make a trip there for the purpose of appraising them.

The post office had $138 on deposit in the bank at time of closing and by order of post office department has filed a preferred claim against the bank. Attorney VanWinkle was in Lansing Tuesday to confer with the attorney general in regard to this claim.

INDEPENDENTS PLAY AT ANN ARBOR SUNDAY

The Pinckney Independent baseball team wil play the Mich. Bell Telephone team at West Park in Ann Arbor Sunday at 1:00 p. m. The early starting of this game is made necessary by the fact that the Ann Arbor and Jackson Moose teams play at 3:00. The telephone team won the title in the Ann Arbor City league last year.

A practise will be held at the local diamond at 6:30 Friday. All members of the team are ordered to be present.

NEW MAIL SERVICE

The Grand Trunk took off its two passenger and mail trains Monday. For this they have substituted a combination train which consists of freight, passenger and mail coaches. This changes the hours of mail arrival at Pinckney. The east bound train goes down at 11:05 A. M. and the west bound one goes up at 1:20 P. M. Monday the 1:20 train was several hours late. This does away with the evening train which arrived here about 6:00 P. M.

The two busses will continue to carry mail. The one from Jackson gets here at 8:30 A. M. and the one from Howell at 4:00 P. M.

CARD OF THANKS

If there was no sorrow in the world, there would be no sympathy. Sympathy was the key note expressed in the many acts of kindness coming from Rev. Berquist, relatives and friends, while flowers were memorials prompt and true. For all these expression of kindly ministrations we are truly grateful.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Allyn
Ruth Allyn.

Checking Working of Legislature

As Session Nears End, Many Ask of Benefits Accomplished.

By Elton R. Eaton

Official Lansing has been spending the present week checking over the work of the special session of the legislature in an effort to find out how much good has been accomplished for the taxpayers of the state so far as a result of the activities of the law making branch of the government.

It is certain that the highway bill, held for days in the house committee, is not going to do all the things many had anticipated. Highway Commissioner Grover Dillman has pointed out emphatically that a very substantial portion of the financial resources of the department cannot be diverted to other uses and the department continue to build roads and maintain them.

How to prevent unemployment and at the same time bring relief to some of the counties and municipalities of the state is the main question that members of the legislature have been considering. It is known that the transfer of the weight tax receipts and a portion of the gas tax moneys from the highway department to other purposes will immediately cause a large number of highway department employees and road workers to be thrown out of employment. Highway department officials have not given an estimate of the number that will be deprived of work, but the number will not be small. This is about the only department of the state government that provides a substantial amount of common labor with employment. Members of the house of representatives have endeavored to save as much highway work as possible and at the same time use as beneficially as possible the proposed diverted highway funds for the benefit of property owners.

It is the highway bill which has been in the house committee for days that has been responsible for the marking of the lower branch of the legislature.

In the senate, the budget bill which has for its purpose a reduction of expenses of various state departments and institutions has been under consideration for nearly two weeks. The senate members have some purpose as many members of the house, to force a greater reduction of big-up salaries than a uniform fifteen per cent cut of all state departments and institutions and this bill, consisting of many closely typewritten pages, has been on the desk of each senate member for nearly two weeks.

If the highway bill can secure immediate action in the house and senate where it must be returned because of amendments that the house contemplates making, and the senate will act speedily upon the budget bill there remains nothing more for the legislature to do but adjourn and return home, something that members have been anxious to do for the past two weeks.

The recommendation of the governor that the legislature submit to the voters this fall the question of a constitutional amendment would permit legislative enactment of an income tax law, did not meet with the approval of the house of representatives when taken up for consideration late last week. To send this question on the way to the senate for consideration would require a two-thirds vote of the house, which it failed to receive.

Two or three additional special messages from the executive office will for more legislative action. One called attention to the fact that many cemetery associations had not complied with state laws by paying the fee imposed. It pointed out that this was due to lack of knowledge of the requirements of the law and it recommended that legislation be enacted which would permit them to keep their charters even though the fees have not been paid.

The other message had for its purpose the restoration on presidential election ballots of the names of presidential electors rather than the names of the presidential candidates. Party leaders said this recommended legislation might keep certain names from influencing the decision of voters.

The house has approved of a bill which permits a longer period for the refunding of municipal bonds.

Current Comment

The Republican convention at Grand Rapids last week refused to take a wet stand voting down the repeal resolution by a considerable majority. It its place they recommended a referendum by means of a constitutional convention composed of delegates elected by the people which is some different from the one which will be placed on the ballot next fall by the Crusaders and other wet organizations. This vote on the repeal of prohibition showed surprising things. For instance wet Genesee county cast all of her votes against repeal and even Wayne county which is supposed to be sopping wet cast 34 votes against it. The bulk of the wet strength seemed to lay in the upper peninsula and not in the industrial centers as has been claimed. Gov. Brucker did not take any stand whatever in this controversy, in fact he failed to even mention it.

The soldiers' bonus resolution was killed in committee and did not even come to a vote in the convention. President Hoover vetoed a special pension bill which would raise the pension rate of certain classes of veterans and his announced determination to veto the one providing for full payment of the soldiers bonus will probably spell the knell of that measure. Both houses, may pass the bill but it is not considered possible that they will muster strength enough to pass it over his veto and there is a sneaking suspicion that they would not if they could. A vote for the measure is considered to be a big help for them in their campaigns next fall. Pension bills will probably continue to be introduced for many, many years to come.

The people of this section are just beginning to realize how important a bank is to a community. In fact it is the hub around which all of the other activities of the area revolve. To the bank the whole country side flocks for financial assistance and legal assistance in the matter of drawing up deeds, contracts, etc. Numerous estates and trust funds are carried here as well as public funds and it may be stated without any exageration that the very life blood of the community flows from this institution.

Of late years many restrictions have been placed by the state on the small country bank. Not all of these have worked out to advantage. In the old days it was customary for banks to take chattel mortgages, that is to loand money on farm stock, tools, etc. The late George Teeple did a good business in this line of endeavor while he headed the Pinckney bank. The banking department will no longer allow banks to take chattel mortgages. Innumerable finance houses have now sprung up that flourish on this lucrative business which once belonged to the banks.

The banking department also frowns on farms and real estate mortgages and urges the purchase of bonds. Many banks became overloaded with these securities and this is the principle reason why some of them could no longer exist. During the regime of Mr. Teeple, we are informed that he never owned a bond, but confined his transactions to farm and chattel mortgages. Of course the main cause of the present financial difficulties is the depression but it is a significant fact that those banks which did not load themselves down with bonds are still doing business.

MILFORD MILAN

Milford Milan, died at his home near Plainfield Monday. The funeral was held at the Green church in Iosco Wednesday at 1:30 p. m.

WEEK OF MAY 1

To the Indian tribes of Michigan is given credit for calling the month of May "Uc-kee-kay, the Planting Moon." It was they who watched the oak leaves attain the size of squirrel's feet before planting corn. Chaucer delighted in this month and many of his writings describe early English May day celebrations.

In our time and place this begins "Blossom Week" in southwest Michigan, acording to the custom of the past few years, but it is our belief the early part of the period will be cold with raw winds, at least temperatures will not be up to the normal.

Unsettled weather at the beginning of the first week of May will give way to clearing conditions about Monday and then a day or so of fair weather may be expected.

Temperatures will be low until about the middle of the week. At that time readings will begin to rise due to the oncoming western storm center. By Thursday or Friday temperatures will be rather high for the season. Increasing cloudiness will bring more or less general and in some cases heavy rains to many sections of Michigan.

Rainy and warm weather will continue to about the end of this week. Early planted potatoes, oats, wheat, rye, barley, meadows and pastures should do better at the end of this week as a result of the increased moisture.

Poor Yield of Wheat Expected

At present writing the condition of the winter wheat in Michigan is above the ten-year average, but it is our opinion the harvest will not be very good, producing a yield less than 13 million bushels in this state. At the begininng of April rye conditions were considerably below the average of past years, but we still believe the final outcome will be fair as predicted in this column last January.

Honey Stocks in Nation Are Short

The 1932 outlook for the beekeeper is favorable providing he has vigorous colonies, good equipment and produces honey at as low a cost as possible, according to F. B. Paddock, Iowa state apiarist.

Two dry seasons have caused many beekeepers to get rid of their colonies, or to neglect the stock and equipment. These conditions indicate lower yields during the season of 1932.

The national crop for 1931 was short. There is now a general shortage of honey throughout most of the United States, according to Mr. Paddock. The demand for honey gradually is increasing.

Dinner Stories

Hotdog: "Why did you stop calling on Eleanor?"

Ole Katz: "Too many traffic signals."

Hotdog: "What do you mean?"

Ole Katz: "Her father caught me kissing her and yelled 'Stop,' then he yelled 'Go.' So I went, and haven't been back since."

One or the Other

Dumb Dora: "Isn't Bill just wonderful? Think of it; he's already been promoted to field marshal."

Horsefeathers: "What, from private to field marshal in two months?"

Dumb Dora: "Did I say field marshal? Well, perhaps it's court martial—I know it's one or the other."

Must Have Argued

"Tell me, Margaret," said Mrs. MacGuire, "how do you and your husband get along together?"

"Very nicely indeed," replied Mrs. Murphy. "Here, Mrs. MacGuire, we've been married goin' on seven months, and I haven't had to call the police in but twice."

When Strategy Worked

Judge Foxy (before he retired from the police bench): "I can't understand a big, husky man like you beating a poor, frail little woman like your wife!"

"But she keeps nagging and taunting me until I lose my temper."

"What does she say?"

"She yells, 'Hit me! I dare you! Go ahead! Just hit me once and I'll have you dragged before that red-headed old fossil of a judge.'"

"Case dismissed."

Putting Over a Swift One

He had proposed and the girl had turned him down.

"Ah, well," he sighed dejectly, "I suppose I'll never marry now."

The girl couldn't help laughing a little, she was so flattered.

"You silly boy!" 'she said. "Because I've turned you down, that doesn't mean that other girls will do the same."

"Of course it does," he returned with a faint smile. "If you won't have me, who will?"—Answers.

Her Many Troubles

Blonde Waitress: "I have stewed kidneys, boiled tongue, fried liver and pig's feet."

Brakie: "Don't tel lme your troubles, sister, give me a chicken pie."

A THRILLING MYSTERY STORY ✦ by MILES BURTON

He lay back in his chair, and sat for a few moments gazing at the ceiling and whistling softly. Sir Edric bore it for as long as he could. And then at last: "I wish to heaven you'd stop that noise, Dick," he said irritably. "If you've nothing further to suggest, you can clear out, I'm busy."

"That's your trouble, Conway," replied Dick agreeably. "You and all your underlings are aways too busy to think. Pass me that Whitaker's Almanack on your desk, will you?"

Sir Edric handed it to him, and he turned over the leaves until he found the information which he sought. Then, with an ingratiating smile, he turned once more to Sir Edric. "Look here," he said, "You dragged me up to town, and now, if you want to get rid of me, you'll have to pay for the privilege. I feel like a little motoring this afternoon. Have you got a car, a very obvious police car, with a comparatively intelligent driver, that you can put at my disposal?"

"What the deuce do you mean?" asked Sir Edric. "Do you suppose that the Government maintain expensive cars for the disreputable acquaintances of Assistant Commisioners of Police to go joy-riding in?"

"I don't want to go joy-riding," replied Dick, "If I did I'd take my own car, which your minions so thoughtfully kept an eye on in St. James' Square the other morning. It's a better bus than anything you've got, but unfortunately it seems a bit too familiar to the Funny Toff. The fact is, I've got an idea, and I'd just love to score one up on Pollard."

"Very well," said Sir Edric hesitatingly, "I suppose you can have a car. But none of your Sherlock Holmes stunts, mind."

"I give you my word that I am only going to look for something, which I probably shan't find," replied Dick. "If I do find it, I won't touch it, but I'll come straight back and let you know. Now I'm going out to get some lunch. I'll be back soon after two, if you will have the car waiting for me."

As Dick lunched it seemed to him that his idea was remarkably far-fetched. Yet, while the Assistant Commissioner had been talking to him, he had tried to put himself in the place of the brain that had organized the robbery. The lorry was bound to leave, with the safes loaded upon it and the men who had carried out the coup hidden under the tarpaulin, at its usual hour, if it was to escape attention. Now, what would the next move be? The natural tendency of a man responsible for such an incriminating cargo would be to dispose of it as soon as possible. But there were difficulties attached to his course. How and where were the safes to be unloaded in broad daylight, for instance?

Then again, the lorry ran no risk of being stopped for some hours after it left the yard. The robbery had not been discovered until after ten; some time must have elapsed before Pollard reached Hatton Garden and established how the safes had been removed; still more time must have been lost before the description of the lorry had been obtained and circulated. It must have been early in the afternoon, at the earliest, before the police generally had been warned to look out for the lorry. The only really dangerous hours, from the point of view of the driver, would be those between say two o'clock and dark.

With ordinary precautions, such as change of number-plates, it should have been easy for the lorry to escape notice until nightfall. Then, under cover of darkness, the safes could be unloaded at some spot where they could be broken open. Such a spot would have to be unfrequented, for by the time unloading could take place, a careful watch would be kept for a lorry unloading safes. There was also the problem of the empty safes to be considered. They were a potential danger so long as they remained where they might be found. The chosen spot, then, must have facilities for the disposal of something like a ton of metal.

Surely the ruined cottage at Coldharbour Point was the very place. The Funny Toff had made use of it before, and, although it had achieved a fleeting notoriety from the discovery of Herridge's body, that incident had been forgotten, and it had reverted to its usual desolation. It would be an excellent place in which to break up the safes, out of sight and hearing of the rest of the world. And the mud below the ruined wharf would swallow up many tons of metal, without showing a trace.

It was for the purpose of visiting this spot that Dick had asked Sir Edric for the loan of a car. He would have driven down to Rainham in his own, but that he felt that there was grave danger of it being recognized. He had no desire to let the Funny Toff know that he was again taking part in the campaign against him. His idea was merely to visit the place, and ascertain whether any traces remained of the unloading of the safes. He would take no action, but merely return to Scotland Yard and report.

Dick finished his lunch, and went back to Sir Edric's office. A car was ready for him, and he gave the driver instructions to take him along the Embankment to Blackfriars. He did not want to announce his destination while in the precints of the Yard, lest his idea, for which he wished to reserve the credit to himself, should be guessed. He felt that Inspector Pollard regarded him with a certain not unjustifiable contempt, and he dearly longed to show him that the amateur brain was capable of thinking of something that had not occurred to the official mind.

CHAPTER XXXVII

Once at Blackfriars, Dick told the driver that he wished to go to Rainham. The man grinned. It was he who had driven the party down to inspect Herridge's body. "Going to have another loow at that there ruined cottage, sir?" he ventured.

"I am, and I am going to take you with me," replied Dick cheerfully. "I've got an idea we might find something interesting there."

Dick peered over the wall.

"I don't know as we can get the car down that lane from the station, sir," said the man. "We'll have a try, though, if you like."

"No, we'll leave the car at the police station, like as we did before, and walk," replied Dick. "There may be tracks in the lane, and I shouldn't like to obscure them.

The two men walked down the track towards Coldharbour Point. For the first mile or two it was hard and dry, and no traces such as Dick hoped to see were visible upon its surface. But after that it degenerated into a mere cart-track across the marshes. It was not very long before ruts became apparent, evidently of quite recent origin.

"It looks as if somebody had been along here lately, sir," observed the car driver.

"It does, indeed," agreed Dick. "What do you make of those wheel tracks?"

The man walked slowly along them for some moments without replying. "Theres b'een a lorry along here, sir," he said at last. "Solid tires, single on the front, twin on the back. Looks as if it had been over the ground twice, sir. Probably it went down to the river and came back again."

"Then I think that our journey has not been wasted," remarked Dick in a tone of satisfaction. "Come on, let's see if we can find out where it stopped."

They followed the trucks down to the sea-wall. There, where the road widened out, were signs of the lorry having been turned. But here again the surface was comparatively hard, and there were no traces of footmarks. They examined the ground carefully, then struck off towards the ruined cottage.

Here everything was as Dick so vividly remembered it. The doors and windows stood gaping, the general air of ruin and desolation was not alleviated by the slightest sign of human habitation. They went over the place thoroughly, peering into every corner, but there was no sign that anyone had been near the place since the removal of Herridge's body.

"That's queer," muttered Dick. "You can't play about with a couple of safes, weighing half a ton each, without leaving some sort of traces behind you. Yet, if they opened the safes down here, they must have done it in the cottage. They would never dare use an oxy-acetylene flare in the open; the whole country-side would have seen the glare. Yet what would they bring them here for, if not to open them?"

"Let's go and have a look at the wharf," he said abruptly. They retraced their steps, and Dick peered over the wall at the mud beneath. The tide was rising, as he expected. He had looked up the time of high water when he had borrowed Sir Edric's Whitaker, and found that it would be at seven o'clock. The edge of the mud was still uncovered, but Dick searched its surface vainly for any signs of the vanished safes.

He strolled on towards the broken wharf, and then, with an exclamation of surprise, quickened his steps. The edge of one of the timbers showed a long scar, as though something sharp and heavy had been pushed across it. The scar had evidently been made quite recently; torn spilnters of wood were scattered around it. And then, suddenly, the events of the previous evening became perfectly clear to him. He wondered at his own folly in not guessing it before.

Dick turned to the car driver "Come on," he said. "Let's get back to the Yard as quickly as possible. The fellows we are after have got a long start on us, as it is."

* * *

The car raced back to Scotland Yard, and Dick, pleading urgency, was immediately shown into Sir Edric's room. He glanced at the clock as he entered. It was twenty minutes past five.

"Hullo, Dick, back already from your joy-ride?" remarked Sir Edric. "We've had a stroke of luck since you've been out. We've found the lorry."

"Have you?" replied Dick. "I rather thought you might. Where did you find it?"

"Near Long Melford, in Suffolk," said Eir Edric. "A policeman going his rounds found it abandoned by the roadside in a country lane, about four o'clock this morning, with the radiator still warm. He reported it, of course, but it wasn't till this afternoon that the Suffolk police circulated our description, and the significance of the find was realized. They got on the phone to us, and Pollard went down there straight away."

Dick strolled over to a map of England that hung upon the wall, a ruler in his hand. He laid the ruler on the map, then measured it against the scale. "Fifty miles as the crow flies, say seventy or eighty by road, avoiding the main routes," he murmured. "Taking things very easily, he would have got there about two o'clock this morning. The driver is at this moment having his tea comfortably by his own fireside in London, somewhere. Poor old Pollard! I hope there's a decent pub somewhere in Long Melford."

"What on earth are you talking about?" exclaimed Sir Edric. "Of course the lorry got there about one or two, the radiator being still warm tells us that, and I'm quite prepared to accept your estimate of the distance of Long Melford from London. But what I want to know is, what was it doing all day yesterday?"

"Driving about with the safes neatly loaded upon it, under the eyes of your perspicuous policemen, I fancy," replied iDck easily. "And I wasn't measuring the distance from Long Melford to London exactly. But I'm sorry to say, Conway, that Messrs. Seccombe & Armitage will never see their safes, or what remains of them, any more."

"Why not?" inquired Sir Edric sharply. "I must say, Dick, you have a deuced irritating way of propounding your ridiculous theories."

"Because they are somewhere at the bottom of the North Sea or German Ocean," replied Dick imperturbably. "Look here, where would be the best place to dispose of those stones?"

"Amsterdam, probably," said Sir Edric. "We have already warned the Dutch authorities to be on the lookout for them."

"Bit late in the day," remarked Harbour Point to some nice quiet spot harbour Point to some nice quiet spot on the Dutch coast would be about a hundred and fifty nauticalmiles. At ten knots—and that's the lowest speed one can allow for a sea-going motorboat in calm weather like this—that distance would be covered in fifteen hours. I fancy that the stones were safe in Holland by eleven o'clock this morning."

"Of course, I've the greatest admiration for your powers of deduction," said Sir Edric sarcastically. "But suppose you sit down and tell me how you arrived at that conclusion."

"Well, I took your imposing but not very comfortable car for a little run to the messuage or tenement which the Funny Toff selected as a mortuary," replied Dick. "There I found the tracks of a lorry. I don't say for certain that was THE lorry, for I'm not sufficiently expert as a sleuth to identify lorries by their tire marks, but it seems fairly likely. There's a decayed sort of wharf close by, which looks very much as though the safes had been hauled or rolled across it. Now comes the deduction. We have already, you will remember, deduced the existence of a motorboat of sorts. Now it was high water yesterday evening at about half-past six. At that time the motorboat could have lain alongside the wharf. I suggest that, in fact, she did so, and that the cases were loaded on to her. If she was big enough to carry them, she was certainly big enough to cross the North Sea in fine weather.

"Look how neatly that disposes of the difficulty of opening the cases. Once out of sight of land, her crew could get busy with their oxy-acetylene flames without the slightest fear of attracting attention. Once they were open, and the stones removed, all that remained to be done was to pitch them overboard. I think you'll agree that I was right when I said that they would never be seen again. As for the lorry, the energetic Pollard is wasting his time, I fancy. It had done its job as soon as the safes were unloaded. It was driven to your romantic Suffold lane and abandoned, mainly as a convenient way of getting rid of it, but, incidentally, with the idea of drawing a red herring across the trail."

For some moments Sir Edric made no reply. "Your imagination seems as brisk as ever, Dick," he said at last. "I don't deny that your theory is possible, even probable, but it seems to me that there are precious few facts to support it. Of course I'll make inquiries all along the riverside, and I'll have a sharp watch kept on every motorboat, or small steamer for that matter, entering the port, for I take it that they'll come back some time. I confess that I'm glad I brought you back to London."

"Since you dragged me back, I'm going to stay for a few nights," remarked Dick. "If I've earned a good mark this afternoon, may I be rewarded with an opportunity of indulging my idle curiosity? I'd like to have a look at that place in Hatton Garden tomorrow morning. I'd say this evening, but it's already too dark to see properly."

"Yes, I suppose you can go along if you want to," replied Sir Edric. "The place is full of policemen; you'd better take one of my cards, and they'll let you in. Pollard's in Suffold, as I told you, so there's no fear of you being arrested at sight."

CHAPTER XXXVIII

Armed with Sir Edric's card, Dick presented himself on the following morning to the sergeant in charge of the rifled premises. His first action was to inspect the strongroom in the basement, from which the remaining safes had been removed to a place of greater security. The steel wall had been cut through as with a knife, leaving a yawning gap through which the yellow clay of the excavations could be seen. He walked through into this, and made his way to the surface of the yard by means of a ladder which had been lowered into the pit.

It was the yard which particularly interested him. Against the back wall of Seccombe & Armitage's premises a corrugated iron shelter had been erected, supported by pillars and girders much heavier than was necessary merely to support the roof. The real use of these girders was apparent, for the middle one was immediately over the pit, and had evidently been used for the purpose of attaching a hoisting tackle. Dick, standing under the shelter ,noticed that it was so contrived that it screened the pit from the observation of all the windows looking over the yard.

The pit itself had been covered with heavy planks, of the type usually employed in inspection pits, for the shape of the yard and the position of the gateway made it necessary to run the wheels of the lorry over the pit in order to maneuver it under the shelter. These planks had been removed, and piled in a heap. Dick glanced at them, but they were covered with oil and grease, which rendered them useless for his purpose.

However, the yard was paved with rough cobblestones, and looked a little more promising. Beginning with the part of it immediately within the gateway, he proceeded to get on to his hands and knees, and to peer about through his lens among the interstices between the stones. The constable stationed in the yard watched him for some seconds with ill-concealed amusement. He then strolled off towards the pit, and disappeared. A few seconds later Dick, turning around, became aware of a row of grinning faces regarding him over the edge.

"Famous detective in characteristic attitude," he muttered. "Well, I don't care, let them laugh. I must say, though, I'm rather glad that Pollard isn't here to see. Hullo, what's this?"

He picked up a few grains of dried mud, and laid them in the palm of his hand, examining them intently through his magnifying glass. Having done so, he uttered an exclamation of satisfaction. "Good enough," he exclaimed softly. "That's what I was looking for. Now, the point is, what are we going to do about it?"

The fact that he had found a particle of galena between the stones of the yard added one more link to the chain of evidence that this particular lorry had been the one which had conveyed Brooks' body from the Mendips. If that were the case, then it was highly probable that a very close connection existed between the All-England Haulage Company and the High Mendip Mining Syndicate. He had not mentioned the existence of the latter firm to Sir Edric; he had indeed said nothing to him of his exploits at the Anchor and Hope, fearing to be overwhelmed by a flood of sarcasm. Should be return to Scotland Yard and reveal his suspicions?

On the whole there seemed very little point in doing so. From his experiences of the methods of the Funny Toff, Dick knew that it was in the last degree improbable that he would have left any traces behind him at the deserted workings. Privately, Dick believed that no more would be heard of the Funny Toff, at least for some years to come. His theory was that this last coup marked the end of his operations. He and all his gang had probably embarked on board the motor-boat, which they would scuttle at sea, landing at some seciuded spot on the coast in small boats. After all, putting aside their earlier successes, the proceeds of the last three coups would yield a colossal sum, if judiciously realized. Or, more probably, the Funny Toff would remain in England, unknown and unsuspected, while the gang dispersed.

The abandonment of the lorry seemed to lend color to this theory. It looked like the last act in the carefully-taged drama: the flinging away of properties no longer required. If this were the case, then these audacious robberies would cease, and the menace of the Funny Toff would be removed, since, even though he himself had remained in England, he could scarcely act without his agents.

The more he considered the matter, the more firmly he became convinced that this was the end which the Funny Toff had planned. However careful he might be, every fresh attempt added to the danger of his discovery. Now that he had amassed wealth which must run into hundreds of thousands, surely he would be satisfied, and seek his own safety. It was practically certain that there was nothing more to be feared from the Funny Toff.

"Dash it! Now that the gang's bolted. I'm darned if I don't go and have another look at that old mine," he said to himself.

Dick, having come to this decision, acted upon it without delay. He went straight to Paddington, where he sent a telegram to the landlord of the Anchor and Hope, asking him to meet him at Wells. He then made inquiries about trains, and found that he had just time to catch the 12:30, which would land him at Wells shortly before four.

These boys average from 12 to 16 years of age, although very few know themselves just how old they are. Although they move 250 to 300 tons of earth a day, their labors are not especially arduous, since they carry only about 10 pounds in the basket which they balance on their heads.

Incidentally Dr. Peterson scoffed at the idea that archeologists have anything to fear from mysterious deaths, such as the so-called "curse" of King "Tut," which was credited by superstitious persons with the death of Lord Carnarvon and others who died a few years after opening the tomb of Tutankamen.

Lord Carnarvon died of a streptococcus infection of a common type, he said, and cited a serious infection contracted by a Michigan worker from a flea bite as an example of how the field worker in Egypt is exposed to dangers of this sort without bringing in supernatural explanations.

Why the city of Karanis was finally abandoned is more or less a mystery. For hundreds of years it was an important grain growing center for Egypt and later Rome, and consists, in fact, of general levels of towns which were built on the same site.

Possibly overtaxation during the days when Rome became ruler of the Egyptian territory, made it impossible for the peasants round about to farm profitably, so that they dispersed and the city died away as a trading center.

Laxity on the part of public officials in the case of the canals which brought water from the Nile may also have been responsible. These canals furnished the life blood of this desert region and when an able governor was in office he required the people to dig out the drifting sands and to remove the sedge grass which choked off the water flow.

'31 Cherry Queen To Paint Murals For College Hall

Selected from her art class as the one best fitted for the task, Miss Maxine Weaver, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry L. Weaver of this city, and 1931 queen of the National Cherry Festival, will paint two murals on the walls of the new reception hall at Greenbrier college, Lewisburg, W. Va.

The reception hall is a new unit added to the Greenbriar campus and Miss Weaver's outstanding talent led to her selection to do two of the murals. She is engaged in illustrating "The Dance of the Dwarfs," by Grieg, which will take her until the first of the year, when she will start on the mural work.

State Films Are Much in Demand

The educational division of the conservation department continues to prove a popular one, Edward A. Hyer, head of the division, reports.

During the month of October the department's educational motion pictures were viewed by 107,565 persons.

Fifty-two organizations borrowed the various films, showing them to 32,487 persons. The department's staff gave 17 lectures in conjunction with the pictures before an attendance of 4,770.

There are 14 members in the rotary school loaning circuit where the pictures were seen by 77,308.

Kazoo Health Officer For 23 Years, Resigns

Dr. Arvin H. Rockwell, for 23 years health officer and director of public health and welfare of Kalamazoo, and recognized as the dean of city officials in point of service, has tendered his resignation to the city commission to take effect January 1.

Dr. Rockwell, who is past 80, has been contemplating resignation for several months, deferring its presentation until he saw the department well housed and organized in the new municipal building.

During Dr. Rockwell's administration the health service has developed from a one-man service to a well organized department with six major branches. Dr. Rockwell graduated from the University of Michigan in 1883.

[illegible] Thought of This

[illegible] way to [illegible] unsightly radiator more attractive! I've worked so hard on the rest of the room and am happy about the way everything looks—except that awkward heater. I guess it's just one of those things that people have to endure in summer because they are useful in winter."

"Why not camouflage it for the summer?" I asked. "Make it an asset instead of a liability."

"How could I?"

"Well, you have a lovely casement window there and if you screened the radiator with a little stand and covered it with wallboard, you'd have a lovely place to put that model ship of yours, or your jewel tree, or the Japanese garden."

Lois had perked up her ears. "Why that's a lovely idea. Tell me how to do it."

"First of all, I'd get a board and four upright pieces and have a carpenter make a substantial little stand and cover it with wallboard. Then I'd decide about the finishing."

"What color should it be?" Lois asked.

"Well, that depends on the rest of the room. If the color scheme needed to be accented, that would be a good place to do it, but your room is so harmonious and inviting now that I think it would be well to have the wallboard of the same tone as your taupe walls and the shelf on the top match the gray-green of your woodwork. When that is done, you can give it personality by glueing a gay print on the front panel or by stenciling a design on it in deep shades of green."

"Yes—or you could use decalcomania designs or silhouettes." Lois was eager. "And I'm not going to stop with the radiator in this room. I'll have the bathroom radiator covered. That will make the shelf I've been needing and a stand over the radiator in my bedroom will make a place to keep my favorite books. And the one in the dining room—"

"—will make a lovely place for your ivy pots. Well, I see where you'll be busy planning these till I get back next time."

"You bet I will—but hurry back so we can plan some more."

M. S. C. IS GIVEN CLASS A RATING

Michigan State college has been placed on the list of educational institutions accredited with class A rating by the American Association of Colleges and Universities.

The association granted M. S. C. accredited rating at its biennial meeting at Chapel Hill, N. C.

Michigan State college graduates and undergraduates now will be admitted to any university in this country without sacrifice or credits, as was the case prior to the association's action.

The Fiery Tongue!

By Frank Glew

When anger points its fiery tongue,
Straight at your mind and heart.
Arouse your trusty tolerance
To quell its piercing dart.
For anger is an enemy
That crushes faith and peace;
Your joy will never be secure
Until your tempers cease.
In combat, be it field or gym,
The man who really wins,
Is he who keeps his senses cool
From the time the game begins.
In business, it's the pleasant man
Who lands the choicest deal;
For those who serve you with a smile
Are the salesmen who appeal.
In friendship, it's the gentle pal
To whom in strife we turn,
And for whose poise and self-control
The fiery-hearted yearn.
In home, the men who really live,
Whose mem'ries are so sweet
Are those whose patience, love and cheer
No anger can defeat.
In life, we always homage pay,
And we elevate by choice,
The men who firmly wend their way
BUT WHO NEVER RAISE THEIR VOICE.

When spilled ink is fresh sponge thoroughly with skim milk. Wash the sponge in cold water, then wash ink again with milk until the stain has disappeared.

The cut-out finger of a pair of worn-out kid gloves, slipped over the end of a brass curtain rod, will help in slipping the curtain on easily.

Do not wash your hair brush in hot water. It will soften the bristles. Use lukewarm water to which a few drops of ammonia have been added.

Our Country—Its History

By ANNE BYRON

WHEN WASHINGTON BECAME PRESIDENT

The United States, which Washington was unanimously called to preside over in 1789, was a far different country from the United States of today.

The mass of the population was scattered along the Atlantic seaboard from Maine to Georgia with a mere handful representing the interests of the United States in the virgin territory beyond the Alleghanies and in the Ohio and Cumberland River valleys.

What is now a land of factories and cities was then a vast stretch of forests and farms. Over 90 per cent of the inhabitants were tillers of the soil.

Politically the United States was far from a democratic republic in 1789, and socially it had very aristocratic tendencies.

The wide gulf which today separates fabulous wealth and sordid poverty did not exist in the United States in those early days. And it was amidst these conditions and circumstances that congress, the judicial body, and President Washington laid the foundation of this great present day government.

Having been inaugurated after due ceremony, accepting the oath of office in the federal building, on which site the present subtreasury now stands in New York city, the president delivered his inaugural address to the members of congress assembled.

How to Achieve Beauty

By MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

HOW TO CHOOSE YOUR BEAUTY HELPS

I have been talking to you in times past about the fundamental laws of beauty, cleanliness, stimulation, etc. Then I told you about the different kinds of beauty and how you should combine them into a perfect ensemble.

This week I want to come down to telling you how to choose the actual beauty helps—the creams, the lotions, etc., that you use to improve your good looks. So few women really know what they are putting on their faces nor why they are doing it. I want to to give you a picture of what these beauty agents really are when you take off their wrappings and trimmings.

I wonder how many of you, when you go to a beauty counter, have a preconceived idea of what you want. Sometimes I wish all beauty preparations would be put up in plain packages so that people would never buy them for their pretty boxes or attractive jars, but only because of what is inside of them. The package cannot improve your skin, no matter how decorative it is.

Walk over to your dressing table and see what you have on it, then ask yourself just why. There should be nothing on it except what you need for your beauty care, and the number of articles should depend upon your particular type and condition of skin. Some women need only two or three jars, while others need a dozen. There is nothing quite so discouraging as to see a woman's dressing table crowded with three times as many jars and bottles as she needs. She may be doing her skin just as much harm by using the wrong things as she would be if she ddi not use any at all. I know women who buy every beauty preparation they hear about simply because they want to be sure they do not miss anything. This type of woman buys by impulse instead of by logic. Her dressing table represents her temperament and not her judgment.

* * *

There are other women who are "penny wise and pound foolish" about their good looks. They feel that everything they spend on themselves is selfishness. They would think nothing of an extra two or three dollars spent on food that is soon eaten, but they let the wrinkles come in their faces, simply because they think they cannot afford to guard against them. They are wrong, all wrong—the way to a man's heart is really much more through his eyes than through his stomach, and when you take care of your own good looks you are doing much more for your family than if you overfed them. Many people eat too much, anyway.

So you see, the problem is to strike a happy balance, get what beauty aids you need—no more and no less, and be sure you know what is inside of the bottles and jars that are lined up on your dressing table.

What Does Your Hand Writing Tell?

By JANET WINTON

Script His Recommendation

The accompanying excerpt is from a handwriting which reveals an interesting combination of traits.

Habits of mind, mood and manner in the average person are rarely harmoniously balanced. Here, however, is charm of personality, an intelligent degree of emotional control and both imagination and the ability to reason logically.

Among the most interesting peculiarities of script is that of joined words. And like most handwriting characteristics, it is unconscious, a muscular reflex of a type of mental action. It is usually found in the scripts of persons who have both constructive ability and fluency of expression. When found in the hand of a detail worker the boss should make a mental note of this oddity of script, to help him remember, when vacancy occurs higher up, to advance a deserving, capable and progressive spirit to a position where he can better employ his abilities and resourcefulness.

An underscored signature emphasizes force of personality. However, such a writer is far from grasping. He is decisive, but knows his place. In other words, he is tactful, while possessing mental processes which have been trained to deal with matters of fact.

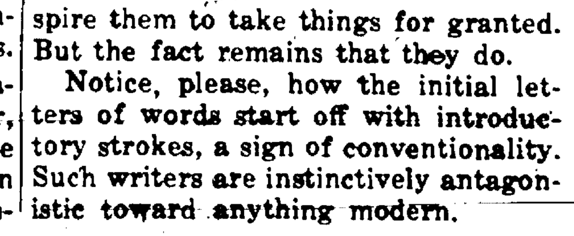
An interest in cultural subjects is shown, literature and music in particular. Such a writer has a sense of proportion and design and must be a smart dresser, judging from tall lower case "r.".

Slow Motion Symphony

Writing which moves leisurely, reflects a plodding intellect. The erect position shows emotional sluggishness. And so, though the writing here is heavy in pressure, an indication of physical strength, such writers' appetites and passions are either unawakened or undeveloped.

Closely dotted "is" indicates a lack of imagination. The fact that these are accented stresses that they have one track minds and are inclined to be dogmatic and assertive.

They themselves are inclined to be lazy, which fact may or may not inspire them to take things for granted. But the fact remains that they do.



Notice, please, how the initial letters of words start off with introductory strokes, a sign of conventionality. Such writers are instinctively antagonistic toward anything modern.

BETTER STREAMS FOR TROUT

The department of conservation is now in a position to hatch and raise to fingerling size all of the trout that available finances permit paying for, and future stress should be given the improvement of habitat for these fish, overseers of Michigan's 14 state fish hatcheries were told at a meeting held at Lansing recently.

The fish division is now in a position to hatch all of the trout necessary for planting, it was said. These fish can be raised to the fingerlin stage in as many numbers as there are feeding stations to hold them and as there is food to feed them.

Attention will now be given to improving the natural habitat of trout, such as improving the food supply in streams,and resnagging.

For several years experts have been experimenting with resnagging on several noted trout streams in Michigan. During the days of lumber industry many rivers and streams were cleared out to facilitate log driving in the spring months. All natural ripples and snags were removed. On some of these streams, notably the Little Manistee, the Pere Marquette, and the Pigeon, hundreds of snags have been artificially constructed under the direction of the Institute for Fisheries Research.

The fish division believes that these snags have been effective in creating better fishing. Many individuals and clubs are now building snags in streams in which theyare interested.

Hatchery oversears were requested at the Lansing meeting to encourage anglers in the vicinity of their stations to carry on such work.

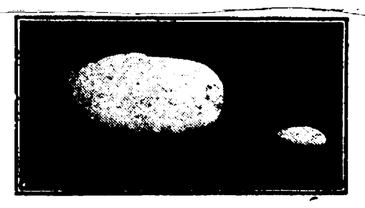
GIANT AZTEC BEAN



The above illustration was reproduced from an actual photograph, to show the comparative size of the Giant Aztec Bean with that of the common field or navy bean.

LARGEST OF ALL BEANS

It is a real bean; looks like a field or navy bean except that it is 8 or 9 times as large. 18 or 20 Giant Aztec beans usually weigh an ounce, while it takes from 140 to 170 of the common field beans to weigh an ounce. It is a bush bean; will stand more drought than most varieties; very hardy and probably the most productive bean grown. One planter reports that two years ago he secured four beans, the product of which he replanted last spring, and in the fall harvested 24(pounds of dry beans. The quality of the Giant Aztec Bean is unexcelled both as a green and dry shell bean. Our supply of seed is limited, and the price is high, but now is the time to get started with this wonderful bean. 8 beans, 25c; 40 beans, $1.00; one-fourth lb., $2.00, postpaid.

ALPENA GARMENT PLANT AT PEAK

Alpena is the center of an industry which is setting a fast pace for the rest of the country's efforts to blot out the elements of business curtailment. It is the Alpena Garment company, of which J. T. Randall is president. This company, manufacturing frocks and dresses in five plants at Alpena, Cheboygan, Onaway and Rogers City, is installing 66 more sewing machines, bringing its total to 900, in order to meet growing demands for its products.

Employment is being increased from 1,150 in the five plants to 1,200, the additional 75 employes to be used in operating the new machines. In February the company shipped 40,000 of dresses and was compelled to turn down an order for 10,000 dozen for April 1 delivery.

Through manufacturing economies the company reports it is able to produce dresses for $3.75 per dozen, as compared with $8.25 two years ago. Production now is sold up to June.

Resurrection Plant

The Genuine "Rose of Jericho"

These peculiar plants are found among the stones and cedars of Palestine. When you get the plant it will have the appearance of a ball of tightly folded leaflets, dry and dead. Put it in water and it will open up its handsome fern-like foliage, turn green and begin to grow in about twenty minutes. Take it out of the water and it curls up, turns brown and becomes dead again. It is capable of apparently dying and coming to life again repeatedly, and will keep in its dead or dormant state for years and reawaken directly upon being placed in water. It is an interesting, curious and most beautiful house plant with fine fern-like leaves of very agreeable fragrance. If you want a "table fern" that will prove satisfactory under all conditions, don't fail to get one of these marvels of plant life. Grows and thrives in a shallow bowl of water, and is greatly admired by everyone.

U. P. Fox Ranch Is World's Largest

A carload of silver fox pelts that brought $750,000 cash at public auction in New York was shipped this winter from the fox ranch of the Hiawatha Fur Farms Co. at Hermansville, near Iron Mountains, the largest fox farm in the world.

The company owns and operates a ranch of 1,560 acres and has made excellent progress since its inception a few years ago.

Last June the ranch had 300 pairs of breeders and 1,400 pups. Late in the summer the company brought 10,000 silver foxes to the Hermansville ranch from other ranches near Thiensvill, Wis.

The carload of pelts shipped to New York was under a heavy guard of armed men. Armed men also patrol the ranches of the company day and night.

Horse meat mixed with fish meal, dried ground bread, carrots and other vegetables form the basis of the fox rations.

Worn out horses are bought by the company from the St. Paul stockyards in carload lots. The horses are killed and prepared for fox food in a modern slaughter-house that is a replica of the Chicago packing houses on a reduced scale.

Pelting time on the ranch began at the end of November. The foxes are killed by chloroforming, taken in truck loads to the furhouse in Hermansville and the pelts removed by expert skinners.

The consignment sent to New York this winter gives Hermansville the distinction of being largest shipping point in the world of raw silver fox pelts.

One-Cent Shell Tax Opposed by Waltons

The Michigan Division of the Isaak Walton League unanimously voted against supporting the federal bill for a cent a shell tax which is being considered by a special senate wildlife committee. Action was taken at the opening session of the annual state convention at the Hotel Chippewa, Manistee. The resolution which condemned the proposed tax as unequitable and contrary to the wishes of Michigan sportsmen,was forwarded to eGorge Hogarth, Michigan conservation director, who is now in Washington attending the hearing. The resolution was introduced by Earl Foltz, of Detroit.

V. F. W. Home Girl Sells First Poppy To Herbert Hoover

Betty Joan Christian of the Veterans of Foreign Wars National home, near Eaton Rapids, was chosen to sell to President Hoover the first 1932 buddy poppy. The president purchased this poppy from Betty Joan's own hand, thus setting his official approval on the nationwide sale, which takes place annually the week preceding Memorial day.

Betty Joan is 4. She came to the V. F. W. home in 1930. Her mother, Mrs. Ruth Christian, lives near Elkhart, Ind. Wilmer Holmes Christian, her father, died in 1929. He was a member of Twin City post, No. 1459, Benton Harbor. In the World war he served in France as a first lieutenant in the quartermaster corps.

Resume Drilling for Oil in Cass Co.

Experienced oil men have never lost faith that oil can be found in paying quantities in the vicinity of Decatur.

Scott Stamler, a driller from Grayling, with three helpers, dropped quietly into Decatur recently and resumed work on the Wright well in Volinia township, Cass county.

A well was put down about 1,300 feet on the Wright farm several years ago. Traces of oil were found and the evidences to an old driller that oil in paying quantities could be found nearby was so clear that Driller Stamler moved the drill across the forty last fall and got it ready for drilling.

HIGHWAY VOLUMES GIVEN UNIVERSITY

With the placing of the Davis library of the National Highway association at the University of Michigan by Charles Davis of Chicago, pioneer, advocate of good roads in the United States, the university transportation library receives 3,000 volumes and 10,000 pamphlets, the most complete record in existence of the growth of national and state highway movement, according to Prof. John S. Worley, curator of the transportation library. The Davis collection is valued at $25,000.

Charles Davis became interested in better roads in 1910 and organized the National Highways association in 1912. For years he was the moving spirit and burden bearer who, almost alone, visualized the value and convenience of a system of state and national highways which would make possible the use of the automobile as a quick and sure form of popular transportation.

"It is hoped," says Prof. Worley, "that the use of this collection by engineers, students and historians of transportation will serve as a constant reminder of the debt the nation owes Charles Davis for his vision and persistence of purpose."

At the time Davis began to assemble the literature of highway engineering there was no sizeable collection of the sort in existence, so that, beginning with the historical aspects, the library now contains pertinent material. At present there are approximately 3,000 volumes, 10,000 pamphlets and 15,000 reference cards in the collection. The pamphlets, because many now are unobtainable, possibly will prove to be the most valuable part of the collection. Combined with the 19,000 volumes and 60,000 pamphlets already in the transportation library, the Davis collection gives the university one of the outstanding collections of material of transportation in the world.

Cadillac Recluse Leaves $2,000 to Poverty Stricken

Five hundred dollars is to be distributed to the poor of Wexford county each year for four years at Christmas time under a provision of the will of Nels P. Nelson, pioneer recluse. No one who owns or operates an automobile can be a beneficiary. Nelson never owned a car himself.

James Johnson, executor, is also trustee of the Christmas poor fund.

Other special bequests were made but relatives were not named specifically, they having been referred to only as recipients of the residue "according to law." The estate was valued at approximately $30,000.

U. of M. Hospital Buys More Radium

One hundred milligrams of radium has been added to the supply at University of Michigan hospital at a cost of $7,000. The hospital now owns 310 milligrams of the precious substance, most of which is in use 24 hours a day. An additional supply must be purchased whenever the demand exceeds the amount available throughout the day. There are 454,000 milligrams in a pound, so the hospital actually owns only a few small specks of the substance.

Lansing Gets Industry

The F. D. Hayes Electric Company will begin production at Lansing of an electric door opener which has been developed by Mason V. Green, shop superintendent. The device opens and closes doors when a person passes through a ray of light.

According to F. D. Hayes, the invention marks a new epoch and a distinct step toward the ultimate use of wireless control in performing many of the menial tasks usually performed by hand or by some mechanical means at the expense of human effort.

Ann Arbor Gets Plane Manufacturing Company

The Hammond Aircraft Corporation has selected Ann Arbor as the base of its operations. It has taken possession of the factory building on North Main street formerly occupied by the Ann Arbor Home Builders, Inc.

Dean B. Hammond, president and general manager, was a member of the class of 1930 in the college of engineering at University of Michigan. Associated with Mr. Hammond in the company are his father, B. D. Hammond, of Detroit, and Erwin F. Skocdapole, several years operations manager and pilot for the Flo Flying Services, Inc.

The company has purchased the manufacturing rights of the Parks Aircraft Corporation ,a division of Detroit Aircraft Corporation, which has been building three models—the Parks P-1, using a 100 horsepower motor; the P-2, with a 135 horsepower motor, and P-2A, with 165 horsepower. All three models are of the three-place, open-cockpit type, the latter two formerly having been known as Ryan bi-planes.

Mr. Hammond at present is concentrating on the manufacture of an experimental three-plane bi-plane powered with a 100 horsepower motor of the V-8 type. Through economies and originalities in construction and design, he expects to be able to place the ship on the market at a price less than $2,000, or from $500 to $1,500 below those prevailing for aircraft of the same specifications and performance.

The factory building leased has about 9,000 square feet of floor space.

Purchase of the Parks Aircraft interests included equipment for the manufacture of about 50 planes, including welded fuselages for nine machines. A month will be required for experimentation before manufacture is begun on a production basis.

Mr. Hammond is the designer of the Van Auken monoplane, now in the experimental stage in the Pontiac plant of C. M. Van Auken.

Mason County Taxes 88 Pct. Above 1923

A survey of Mason county tax records by the Mason County Farm bureau reveals the state tax was 25 per cent higher in 1931than in 1923. The county tax was 88 per cent greater. Owing to increased weight taxes the road tax was decreased 7 per cent.

The school tax, despite a 75 per cent increase in primary money, has remained about the same and has averged from 40 to 90 per cent of all taxes.

Salaries of county officials show a 58 per cent increase from $17,448.44 in 1923 to $27,429.88 in 1931. Nine hundred fifty pieces of farm property have been offered for sale for 1929 taxes.

Section of East Jordan Line May Be Abandoned

Recommendations have been made to the interstate commerce commission by R. L. The report recommended denial of a request to abandon the part of the road between East Jordan and Marble in Charlevoix and Antrim counties.

MAY BUILD MORE AT V. F. W. HOME

More cottages are needed and probably will be built this year at the national home of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, located near Eaton Rapids, according to an announcement made recently by Col. Robert G. Woodside of Pittsburgh, Pa., president of the institution.

The waiting list of widows and children of ex-service men seeking a place in the home is growing larger rapidly, and the V. F. W. is anxious to increase its facilities to provide homes for them. There now are 125 children and 12 widows being accommodated at the home.

The size of the V. F. W. expansion program this year, according to Col. Woodside, will depend upon the success of the sale of poppies, which takes place on a nationwide basis the week preceding Memorial day. One cent from each poppy sold in the United States goes directly toward the support of the home.

At the semi-annual meeting of the board of trustees, to be held in May, a definite construction program is to be adopted.

Osceola County Is Given Judgment of $19,986

Osceola county was given a judgment of $19,986.40 by a jury in circuit court which heard the case brought against the Michigan Survey Co. of Lansing funds on deposit in the First National bank of Reed City when it closed Oct. 1, 1931. The Lansing concern furnished the county's surety bond.

PINCKNEY INDEPENDENTS WIN OPENER FROM HOWELL

The Pinckney Independent base ball team opened their season with a victory over Howell Sunday by a score of 15 to 12. Russell Copeland started pitching for Pinckney and let Howell down with one run during the five innings he worked. Peterson also of Fowlerville started for Howell and was found for six runs during the five innings he was in the box. Both starting pitchers were removed in the fifth and Lefty Reason pitched the last four innings for Pinckney and Jones for Howell. Both lacked control and were hit hard. Pinckney did the hardest hitting and consequently finished ahead. Lefty Reason and Ferrell showed the way for the local sluggers, each hitting the ball hard. The former got two triples and a double and the latter a triple and two doubles. Cox played a nice game at second for Pinckney, handling nine chances without an error. This was the first game of the season for each team and the boys should do better in games to come when they have had more practise.

Fowlerville has no team this year and both Howell and Pinckney helped themselves to Fowlerville players. Peterson, Copeland and Finlan each played there last year.

PINCKNEY SCHOOL BALANCES BUDGET

After it became known that the school funds were tied up and a considerable loss would be sustained by the district, it was thought for a time that the entire school system would be paralyzed. However, the school authorities immediately went to work and worked out a budget by which the same high standards of the school are to be maintained and at the same time school taxes will not be increased. This plan was made possible by a voluntary slash in wages on the part of the teachers. Mr. and Mrs. Doyle, who hold signed contracts running for two years, asked the Bd. of Ed. to reduce the figure in their contracts by approximately $1,200 for the two years. All other teachers including the janitor have voluntarily accepted their share of the burden. The teachers will receive part of their salaries this spring. The balance will be paid next year.

At one time a plan was considered to run the school on a 9 months basis but after careful consideration the plan was found to be financially unsound.

School taxes have been reduced 25 per cent during the last three years and if this years funds had been available the rate could have been made still lower.

If the above budget, as planned, is carefully carried out the district should make up their loss in about three years.

PHILATHEA NOTES

An interest group of Philathea members and several visitors enjoyed the lesson discussion last Sunday, and the special research question concerning Isaac. Next Sunday, if the Mother's Day services permit a class period, the subject will be a temperance lesson "Esau Sells His Birthright." Genesis 25:27-34.

An invitation was extended at our April gathering to meet with Mrs. John Wagner at Patterson Lake, on the second Wednesday in May. Members and friends are urged to remember this.

A Comforting Thought

The greatest service of the modern funeral director is that of lifting the load of responsibility from the shoulders of the bereaved. From the moment that he is called, he assumes charge of the many details which require attention. We give special attention to this comforting service.
