High School Play Friday, May 11

Senior Class of the Pinckney High School to Present Three Act Farce on May 11. Good Attendance is Expected.

For the past several weeks the Senior Class of the Pinckney High School have been working hard on their play for this year. It is a three act farce entitled "There Goes the Bride". As the Senior class numbers some thirty members this year the entire cast was taken from there. Lucius Wilson and Marjorie Hendee have the leads and are ably supported by the others. The cast is as follows:

Phyllis, engaged to be married — Marjorie Hendee
Mrs. Curtis, her mother — Lucila Eikhoff
Dr. Curtis, her father — Arthur Eikhoff
Beachy, her sister — Mary Jane AtLee
Billy, her brother — Gerald Clinton
Anastatia, the cook in the Curtis home — Janis Merrill
Officer O'Flynn, of the Police Dept. — Ladonis Spears
Natalie, Phyllis' friend — Madge Jack
Lewis, Phyllis' fiance — Lorain Drown
Sally, the girl next door — Evelyn Hendee
Tom Eldridge, himself — Lucius Wilson
Dinty, Tom's friend — Robert Young

The Senior play not only provides funds for the graduating class but the receipts are also used for football basket ball and base ball. So it is imperative that the attendance be sufficient in order that these activities may be continued.

SCHOOL NOTES

The Junior-Senior play "There Goes the Bride" is a new high class farce written by Ray Cloverfield. It may be produced without royalty by amateurs until Sept. after which time a royalty must be paid by anyone producing it. This puts it in a class with the better plays. The story is as follows:

When the play opens, Phyllis is having a fitting of her wedding gown and her fiance and her girl friend are off playing tennis. The loyal kid sister, Beachy, sees which way the wind is blowing, but it takes real evidence to convince Phyllis that Lewis is marrying for the money. Then, hurt and indignant, she tells Lewis that the wedding is off. Lewis pleads her that she will make him a better fiance unless he finds another husband within a day, and Phyllis tells him that she'll do just that. Right then, in walks our hero, Tom, considerably the worse from an automobile accident and in a suit of cloth that make him look like a tramp. Phyllis proposes to Tom and he accepts. Of course, Phyllis repents her hasty words and tries to avoid the agreement in spite of the fact that there's a charm about this manly stranger that makes her realize she didn't love Lewis. In her perplexity she finally lets Lewis persuade her to elope, and then, but we'll not spoil the surprises of this fresh and unexpected part by telling. The parts are unusually piquant; the charmingly contrasted parents, the Irish maid and the cop, that attractive foursome Phyllis, Natalie, Tom and Lewis, cute Beachy; her brother Billy; and that nuisance of a kid, Sally.

The first base ball game of the season resulted in a defeat for Pinckney, the score being 9 to 3 in favor of Dexter. Better luck next time, boys.

Mr. Charles Cleary of the Cleary Business Institute visited our school Monday afternoon.

The following had a perfect attendance this month: Dick Amburgey, Stanley Culver, Ruth Devereaux, John Dillan Mary Dillan, Kathyrn Dillaway Jack Hannet, Eva Harnack, Isabel Head, Joe Lavey, Merlyn Lavey, John Livermore, Robert Martin, Francis Messersmid, Megan Meyer, Ruth Niga, Rosemary Read, Helen Reason, Leota Reason and Lorna Weeks.

Free Shows to Start Saturday, May 5

Pinckney Board of Commerce to Sponsor One Free Entertainment Each Week. They Will be Given on Village Square

Some time ago the Pinckney Board of Commerce signed a contract with a Michigan Center man to give one free entertainment each week on the village square. The first one will be given on Saturday, May 5. There will be a feature film and also a comedy reel. These shows will start shortly after 8:00 P.M. or as soon as it gets dark enough. They will be given in about the same place as the other ones were some years ago which was just north of the town hall.

It is asked that the youngsters be as orderly as possible so as not to disturb those who come to see the pictures.

Also do not park your car where it will prevent others from seeing the pictures.

This is one of the objects of the Board of Commerce, to provide free entertainment for the people of this section. Other attractions will also be secured later.

BOND ELECTION RESULTS

The $38,000,000 bond proposition failed to get any support in this section being heavily beaten. In Putnam there were 136 votes cast of which 128 were against it and only 8 for it.

In Howell City 510 votes were cast, 457 were no and 53 yes.

In Hamburg out of 115 votes cast, 104 voted no and 11 yes.

In Unadilla only 40 voted. Of these 31 were no and 9 yes.

In Dexter Township 43 votes were cast, 42 no and one yes.

The principal cause of the bills defeat was the fear that it would mean an increase of the property tay. The bill provided that the money should be raised by sales tax, corporation tax or by such measures as the legislature should see fit. This was generally understood to indicate a property tax and as the people fought hard for the 15 mill tax limitation they have no intention of boosting it or letting anyone else do so.

CRUMBAUGH TO TEST OUT LIQUOR LAWS

The beer license application of James Crumbaugh, of the Stockbridge Hotel, was turned down by the village council at a meeting there last Monday night at which time the council rooms were crowded. The hearing became warm when Crumbaugh was questioned as to his history previous to coming to Stockbridge. All this he characterized as absolute lies. He also denied selling beer to minors.

Last Thursday Crumbaugh started action in the Ingham county circuit court before Judge Leland Carr asking that he be granted a writ of mandamus forcing the Stockbridge council to recomend that he be granted a beer licensee. He states that their refusal is the result of caprice and ill will which certain members of the council have against him. He further states that he can furnish statements from the law enforcing officers of the community as to his good character and proper conduct of his hotel.

The state law gives governing bodies the power in handeling license permits. It has not yet been tested out in court however.

Some five or six years ago Crumbaugh operated the Keystone Club at Lakeland which later burned down. While here he was raided many times by George Wimbles who was then sheriff and his deputies and held for trial on charges of violating the liquor law. But he was never tried, all charges being finally dismissed. He was later tried in the federal court in Detroit on a similar charge, convicted and served a sentence.

DIRECT CREDIT MASS MEETING TO BE HELD HERE MAY 9

A couple of weeks ago representatives of the Direct Credit Assoc. of Detroit appeared before the Board of Commerce and explained what their organization stands for and their object in forming this association. The members were so impressed that many of them signed membership cards and arranged for another meeting to be held in the Community Hall on May 9. If you want to learn how to abolish taxes and interest you should attend this meeting.

Base Ball Season to Open Here Sunday

Pinckney Team to Open Season at Home by Meeting Ancient Rivals Dexter. Good Game is Promised

Next Sunday, May 6 the Pinckney Independent base ball team will open their season when they meet Dexter at Pinckney. The boys have held several workouts and ought to be able to give a good account of themselves. The lineup is undecided as yet but will be picked from the following: 2 Pitchers Harow Haines, Roy Robinson; catchers, Tuttle and Ferrel; infield Culver, Drummond, Dinkel, Brown and Battle; outfield, Bob Smith, Dallas Cox, Clare Miller, Rollie Shehan. Efforts are being made to get Claude Kennedy and Don Swarthout to put on their spiked shoes again In 1929, Swarthout lead the team in hitting and Kennedy in fielding, their efforts doing much towards the team record of 20 wins out of 25 starts.

The Dexter team is managed by Horace Lickly and won the championship of the Washtenaw County League in a split season schedule only to lose out to the Ann Arbor Moose in a five game playoff. Novack, a left hander is their star pitcher, Ernie Richmond, old Normal star catches, Pete Crocker, 1b, Smith 2b, Hughes ss, Ricker 3b, Blanchard, Lickly and Elsasser, outfield. This team is very popular around Dexter, the citizens there having presented them with a new ball park and they will undoubtedly support them here strongly in attendance. Pinckney fans should see to it that they are not outnumbered. The game will start at 3:00. Be sure and let us see you there.

PAINT FROM BEANS

Ed Sorenson is plowing 40 acres the Lapham farm onthe Dexter road which he will plant to soy beans. The Ford Motor Co. will use the beans in the manufacture of automobile paint and will furnish the seed. Mr. Sorenson operates the Independent Gear Factory here which makes Ford gears.

PHILATHEA NOTES

Next week Wednesday, May 9, the ladies are to meet at the church parlors, with Mrs. Rose Hendee and Mrs. Edna Campbell on the entertainment committee, and the regular pot luck feature. It has been thought best to transfer the Missionary program to the June meeting, when Mrs. Hattie Swarthout expects to entertain us, therefore, this coming meeting will be a regular social and business occasion, but if anyone wishes to contribute to the Missionary fund at this meeting, the treasurer will undoubtedly be glad to receive it. The regular monthly offering goes for class expenses, except on the Missionary days set aside since we have no regular dues.

The program committee for the Missionary meeting in June will be Mrs. Carrie Swarthout and Mrs. Hattie Decker.

The next lesson, continuing the interesting themes from Matthew, will be "Jesus Acclaimed as King" Matt. 21:1-1b. Mrs. Decker suggests that the daily readings are helpful in the preparation of the lesson.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our most sincere appreciation to all who assisted us in any way during our bereavement. May you all find such friends in your time of sorrow.

Mrs. Winifred Graves

Current Comment

News of the escape of the outlaw, Dillinger, from the trap which was set for him in Wisconsin last week by federal officers, sheriffs and state police overshadowed everything else. In his escape he killed two officers and wounded several others. In these skirmishes Dillinger seems to have the advantage. The officers of the law must make sure the suspects are the Dillinger gang before they shoot while no such scruples bother Dillinger who opens fire on any car he is suspicious of. Notwithstanding the care taken by the officers two CCC camp workers who got in the line of fire during the battle between Dillinger and the officers were shot down. However the end is not far and it will be similar to the demise of Jesse James, Sam Bass, Harry Tracy, and other notorious outlaws of the past.

The McLeod bank deposit payoff bill seems to be dead at the present time with little likelehood of becoming a law. However, another bill may be passed in its place loaning the bank's money to pay off their depositors. The McLeod bill meant nothing more or less than taxing the people to pay off the bank depositors for the tax method is the only way the government has to raise money. This, if passed, would have established a precedent and other bills would have been introduced to pay off those who have stocks in loan companies or who own frozen or worthless bonds. This would only mean a tax boost without any appreciable benefit derived from it.

William Rogers, the quaint humorist of the screen and radio, still continues as the favorite of the public. The attendence at Howell last week to the three showings of David Harum broke all records there. We will admit that in the story of the old country banker and horse trader of the nineties he had an admirable vehicle in which to portray his talents but we can't picture Douglas Fairbanks, Clark Gable, George Raft or John Barrymore handeling the part in the manner Rogers did. No, Will Roger's charm for the masses lies in the fact that he is intensely human, he talks the language of the common people and thinks their thoughts, he does not have to act on the screen. All he does is to be natural. The only other screen actor who is in his class is Marie Dressler and she has many of his characteristics.

We understand Grosbeck petitions for governor are already being circulated in this county and other places While the ex-governor has not signified what his intentions are in this matter, his friends are not losing any time over that. Undoubtedly he would get a big vote from Wayne County and change the political aspect in the primaries considerable.

There is one field of labor which seems to be neglected. That is the odd jobs man. Many do not care for this line of work and the demand almost always exceeds the supply. For years the late Charles VanOrden had a monopoly on this line of work here. He raked lawns, mowed them, split wood, beat rugs etc. He was employed practically all the time. Last year he died at the age of 80 yrs. working almost up to the last. His passing left a void here which was not filled until this month when Elmer Book, a retired farmer in his seventies, started out in this line. He informs us that there is a strong demand for his services and he is booked for weeks ahead.

Mary Was Right

Mary—If you please, mum, the cat's had chickens.

Mistress—Nonsense, Mary; you mean kittens.

Mary—Was them chickens or kittens you brought home this morning?

The WEDDING MARCH MURDER

by MONTE BARRETT

Copyright, 1933, by the Bobbs-Merrill Co. WNU Service.

SYNOPSIS

Waiting in the minister's study, Jim Franklin, about to be married to Doris Carmody, is stabbed to death. Peter Cardigan, with Sergeant Kilday, begin the investigation. Franklin, while waiting, had visitors, among them his mistress, "Choo Choo" Train; his intended wife's father, Ambrose Carmody; her brother, Rylie; Daniel Bullis, politician, and a woman in a blue frock. Rylie Carmody admits trying to stop the wedding, after being informed by Webster Spears that Franklin was still friendly with Choo Choo, despite his approaching marriage. Kilday secures the dead man's keys. From Callis Shipley, one of the bridesmaids, Rylie's friend, the investigators learn nothing. An interview with Bullis is fruitless. Webster Spears admits informing Rylie Carmody of Franklin's relations with Choo Choo, for Doris Carmody's sake, in the hope of preventing the wedding. Fletcher, Franklin's man-servant, is reticent. An interview with Milo Dunbar, Franklin's law partner, and search of the dead man's office, reveals nothing of importance. Choo Choo admits her relations with Franklin were to continue after his marriage. Six of the seven keys Franklin carried are traced to their respective locks. One the investigators are unable to place. Callis Shipley, again interviewed, confesses previous deception, but nothing new is elucidated.

"There's nothing else left to say," retorted the girl. "Now may I go?"

Peter, who had championed the girl's cause in spite of himself, felt a reluctant admiration for the manner in which she defied the detective, even though his faith in her innocence of all knowledge of the crime had been shaken.

Kilday scowled. He was evidently at a loss as to how to proceed further with his questioning. "All right," he declared reluctantly, "you may go, but," he repeated the instructions he had previously given Webster Spears about remaining within reach. "We'll probably want another talk with you, later," he added.

The minute the girl had left, an assistant announced the arrival of Daniel Bullis. The sergeant's surprise was apparent as he looked up at the politician, whose bulk filled the doorway.

"Come in, Mr. Bullis. What can I do for you this morning?"

Bullis smiled with his lips, while his eyes darted inquisitively about the room. "You sent a man for my finger-prints," he declared. "Why?"

"Finger-prints?" Kilday affected not to understand.

The politician eased himself into a chair which creaked under his weight. "Oh, your man didn't ink my fingers. But he was very anxious that I take a cigarette from one of those polished cases of yours. I'd heard of them before." He studied the detective thoughtfully. "I don't smoke cigarettes, Sergeant," he added. As though to emphasize his point he bit the end from a fat black cigar.

"I wouldn't be surprised but what I'd left several finger-prints in the study of that church, Sergeant," Bullis went on evenly. His pale eyes had come to a focus on Kilday but there was no way of reading the expression behind that gaze. "It would be odd if I hadn't. I was there, you know. I don't make any bones about that."

Again he paused. He gave the impression of choosing each word deliberately. Peter found himself weighing them for any hidden significance not at first apparent, but could find none. Evidently it was only the man's manner.

"It's funny," Bullis rambled on, "we've both been around this town a long time, but we'd never met before. Of course, I had heard about you, Sergeant, from time to time."

The sergeant smiled. "I'd heard a great deal about you, too, Mr. Bullis."

The politician nodded. "I guess you have," he said. "Most people do. And you'll hear more of me. I intend to hang around a good while longer."

It sounded like a challenge. Peter saw the sergeant stiffen.

"Now about those finger-prints." Bullis' voice had again lapsed into a monotone. "You know I was there. What do you expect them to prove?"

"Possibly nothing," Kilday declared. "It's a means of identifying every one there. Often finger-prints provide us with a means of elimination. By identifying those persons we know to be innocent, we have left only those of the person who is guilty. The simple fact that there are finger-prints of an individual in that room doesn't convict that person." The officer faced the politician squarely. "Not that I'm making any promises, you understand."

Bullis nodded silently.

"About those finger-prints," the detective continued. "You say my man didn't get them?"

"I don't smoke cigarettes," Bullis repeated.

The sergeant extracted a cigarette case from a drawer of his desk. "As I've explained, it's largely a matter of form, but I'll need samples of yours, Mr. Bullis."

The politician made no move to take the case. "I don't like finger-prints," he said. "They're too—permanent. I've already told you I was there."

"Did you have a revolver, Mr. Bullis?"

The politician's eyes betrayed a flicker of interest. "No."

"Did you see a revolver in that study, or handle one?"

"No."

"Well, I have to identify a thumb-print on a revolver. You've nothing to worry about, apparently. Besides," he added smilingly, "this isn't a permanent record. These specimens can be destroyed, after we compare them."

Bullis still hesitated, then, taking the cigarette case, he pressed his fingers against it deliberately. "I'll depend on you, Sergeant," he said. "I'll confess I don't like the idea."

That was all. With only a nod to Peter, he lumbered from the room.

The sergeant puffed meditatively after Bullis' departure. "What do you suppose was on his mind? There's something worrying him, Peter. He didn't seem worried when I mentioned the revolver. He knows we couldn't have anything else on him, but he's bothered. Can you figure it out?"

"It may be just as he says," the novelist pointed out, "a natural aversion to being finger-printed. Remember, if you can judge the man by his reputation, he's had a great deal to do with the underworld. That would explain such an aversion."

"We'll soon know if that's all that's worrying him," Kilday was assured. "Come on into the Bertillon room. I'm going to check up on that thumb-print on the revolver."

With the aid of Kilday's polished cigarette cases, the finger-prints of most of those under suspicion had already been collected. The sergeant himself had obtained those of Choo Choo Train, Callis Shipley and Daniel Bullis. The men who had been dispatched for the others had returned by now, and the work of attempting to identify the five sets of prints found in the study, together with the thumb mark on the revolver, had begun.

In the Bertillon laboratory, each print had been photographed after careful preparation. Then the work of matching began, each whorl and line of a print serving as a guide to the identity of the person making it. On a flat desk in the center of a room whose walls were lined with pictures of criminals whose identity had been established in this very way, lay a number of square white cards. Some of these had as many as half a dozen different finger-print photographs pasted on them. Others had but one. Previously, the prints had been carefully sorted out, and the duplicates all placed together.

In a second orderly pile were the negatives of specimens collected by the detectives, from the suspects. A clerk armed with a reading-glass was attempting to match the prints in the two piles.

"One set has already been matched," declared the sergeant. He handed Peter two cards, clipped together, and pointed out the means by which the specimens had been identified. "Nick Royce," said the sergeant. He read the label attached to the card. "'Finger-prints found on the telephone and on surface of desk.' H'm. Seems to bear out his story, doesn't it?"

"So far, at least," agreed Peter.

The officer indicated a vacant chair for the novelist and drew one up for himself. "What luck are you having with the one on the gun?" he inquired of his assistant. "That's the most important one."

Silently the man handed him another clip of cards. Kilday inspected them earnestly, and then passed them on to Peter.

"The thumb-print matches these prints found in the study," he said. "Now we have only to find which one of our suspects left these prints."

Reaching among the specimens, he selected those of Webster Spears. He made no attempt to conceal his eagerness as he compared these with the print on the revolver, but after only a moment he looked up, frowning.

"Not Spears," he said.

He next tried specimens of Rylie Carmody's finger-prints, with the same disappointing result. He slammed the cards impatiently upon the desk. "What do you think of that, Peter? If neither of them is guilty, what was the girl trying to protect them for? Unless," a light dawned on his face, "h'm! Perhaps it was herself she was protecting."

But Callis Shipley's prints did not match the one on the gun, either.

Neither Callis Shipley's nor Choo Choo Train's prints could be identified with any of those found in the study. This disappointed the officer. He stared at one of the cards in perplexity. "I'd have sworn that these were a woman's prints," he said. "Small and slender. Of course, they might belong to a boy or a small man." His tone was doubtful.

Nor did they find any prints which corresponded with those of Rylie Carmody and his father. Apparently neither had left any marks in the study.

"Odd," said Peter.

Kilday raised bushy eyebrows.

"I mean that I'm more suspicious when a man leaves no finger-prints," the novelist explained. "I have always felt that the guilty man, or the man who knew that a crime had been or would be committed, took precautions against leaving finger-prints which might later identify him. The person who scatters finger-prints about either has a clear conscience or is very foolish. I don't think we are dealing with the latter class here."

"Then how do you explain the print on the gun?" demanded Kilday.

"That's what I asked you a bit ago. I can't explain it. I'm not even trying to, yet."

The work went patiently on. Daniel Bullis' were the next prints identified. They discovered that he had left marks on both the front and rear doors of the study, as well as on the desk. But this was of scant value. They already knew he had been in the room, and they were able to prove nothing further. The thumb-print was very different from the one on the revolver.

Yet none of the other prints would match. Of all those found in the room, only those of Doctor Abernathy, Nick Royce and Dan Bullis matched. As for the others, Ambrose Carmody and his son, Rylie; Choo Choo Train and Callis Shipley had none of them left prints. Of the two unidentified sets, one were those Kilday had been so sure were made by a woman.

The thumb-print on the gun had been identified with prints found in the room, but not with those of any of these persons under suspicion.

Kilday puffed thoughtfully, his attention apparently centered on the blue clouds that encircled him. "Two sets still unidentified," he mused aloud. "One of them apparently belonging to a woman, but neither Callis Shipley's nor Choo Choo Train's. That would be our woman in blue.

"The other set matches the print on the gun, and that doesn't fit any of our previous notions of the crime. Who else was there, whose specimens we haven't got? Why did the murderer go there with a revolver, then change his mind and use Doctor Abernathy's dagger? How does it happen that the murderer left a thumb-print on the revolver although he wiped the dagger clean of prints? This doesn't make sense.

"And," he continued, "why is Callis Shipley trying to protect Webster Spears? By all the laws of reason, that should be his thumb-print on the revolver."

Peter was equally puzzled. Did the fact that this print on the revolver remained unidentified absolve all those whose finger-prints did not match it from suspicion? How about Callis Shipley? Reluctantly, he was forced to admit that Kilday had ample grounds for his mistrust of her. But if both Rylie Carmody and Webster Spears were cleared of suspicion, what was the girl trying to conceal? And if that print on the gun was a clue (as it certainly seemed to be) who else should they suspect? What other finger-prints could they match against it? The woman in blue? Who was she? How could they obtain a specimen of her finger-prints? Daniel Bullis was the only person who could identify her and it seemed certain that they could expect little help from him along that line. Was there anyone else? Fletcher, Franklin's servant? That was absurd. He hadn't been near the church. There was Milo Dunbar, too. He had been there, but he had been the dead man's partner. What motive could be manufactured from that? Besides, there was no evidence that he had been in the sacristy at any time, other than the doubtful testimony of Nick Royce that he had been unable to find the man in the church, a short time before the wedding. As Kilday had pointed out, this was not important evidence, inasmuch as it would have been almost surprising if Royce had been able to pick him out of all that throng which had crowded the church.

All these and many other doubts assailed the novelist. He could not shake his skepticism concerning finger-prints, either. If there were none on the knife with which the crime had been committed, why should they have expected the murderer to have left any elsewhere? If that were true, how account for the thumb-print on the gun? He was irritated by the manner in which his reasoning led him in circles. There seemed to be no end and no beginning. Nowhere could he find a tangible fact to which he might cling or from which he might argue.

He almost wished that he might share Kilday's confidence in that thumb-print.

The door behind them was flung open by an excited subordinate.

"We've found it, Sergeant!" the man exclaimed. "We have discovered who registered that revolver when it was purchased."

Kilday made no attempt to conceal his excitement. "Who was it, man? Don't stand there like an idiot," he urged impatiently.

"It belonged to Jim Franklin himself," declared the man. "The registration shows that he bought it two years ago."

That Body of Yours

By

JAMES W. BARTON, M. D.

Treating the Patient, Not the Ailment

THE physician who has had to start practice with less hospital training than he felt he needed often regrets this, and feels that he would be doing much better work, had he been able to stay even a few months longer about the hospital.

Now no one would question the value of hospital training with all the available laboratories, X-ray and physiotherapy departments, but there may be the danger that while various "tests" are being made, valuable time is being lost. Not that this occurs very often, but it does occur sometimes.

However the real danger from too much hospital experience is that the disease or the suspected disease is always in the physician's mind, and the patient himself is in the background. Many of the symptoms of which the patient complains may not really exist except in his mind.

Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, Rochester, Minn., tells us that patients who complain of physical ailments are often really mental patients. These patients do not talk about their mental symptoms, but discover physical ailments in stomach, liver, kidneys, lungs, heart or other organs. Their description of the symptoms of any one of these ailments may be just enough like the genuine symptoms that the physician naturally makes various tests to see if he has the right diagnosis.

The thought is that if, as Dr. C. F. Martin, Montreal, suggests, every patient coming in to see his doctor is considered a mental patient, much less time would be lost in finding out the patient's real ailment than if elaborate laboratory and other tests are first made.

For instance what one eats is less important than how it is eaten. One should never eat when tired.

Doctor Alvarez suggests to physicians that if a patient does not improve, to do no more laboratory work but talk to him and get a real history of his case.

The thought for the patient is that when he goes to his doctor he should tell him everything about his home and business life and about his habits, instead of just about these "queer" symptoms which may or may not really exist.

Dentists to Be Medical Specialists

THE fact that most ailments come by way of the mouth and nose is of course known to everybody.

But that the teeth, because of the loss of them, because of their irregularity preventing a real chewing surface, and the infection in their roots, cause many and grave ailments, is not generally known.

However both the dental and medical professions know this, and practically all disagreements as to the right thing to do in any case are now at an end as the dentist and doctor think only of the patient's welfare.

The trouble has been that physicians have not known as much about teeth and their defects as they should have known, and dentists have not known the whole history of the case, when that case has come in for dental treatment.

Some idea of how dentists and physicians are now getting together may be gathered from the statement of Dr. M. C. Winternitz, dean of the Yale university school of medicine.

"It is absolutely necessary for human well being that medicine should foster the training of specialists who will all be on an equal footing and who will have regard for the patient as a physical, mental, and social organism—and it must not be forgotten that the teeth are a part of the physical organism, your body. Dentistry must have the same relation as any other specialty to medicine as a whole. That is, be on the same standing as the nose and throat specialist, the eye specialist, the heart or other specialist."

At Yale university this view is being carried into effect by bringing into the school of medicine a few of the best available graduates of schools of dentistry and giving them material assistance to take the degree of doctor of medicine while continuing to practice dentistry.

It is likely to be a number of years before dentists, by taking extra studies at the medical college and clinics at the hospitals, will became really specialists in one branch of medicine, that is the mouth.

However the big thing is that the patient who heretofore wanted to follow his dentist's advice because he had confidence in him, and likewise his physician's advice for the same reason, will hereafter get the best advice of both because there will be but the one profession, and dentists will be specialists in the profession of medicine.

Why Hospitals Use a Liquid Laxative

Hospitals and doctors have always used liquid laxatives. And the public is fast returning to laxatives in liquid form. Do you know the reasons?

The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can thus be regulated to suit individual need. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The right dose of a liquid laxative brings a perfect movement, and there is no discomfort at the time, or after.

The wrong cathartic may often do more harm than good.

A properly prepared liquid laxative like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin brings safe relief from constipation. It gently helps the average person's bowels back to regularity. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is an approved liquid laxative which all druggists keep ready for use. It makes an ideal family laxative; effective for all ages, and may be given the youngest child. WHAT ARE YOUR IMPRESSIONS

The following verses are by Howard Reed who aspires to poet laureate of the Dispatch. We don't know about the meter of it but are publishing it so we can get your impression.

'Twas midnight on the ocean,
Not a street car was in sight
The captain hailed a taxi cab,
It rained all day that night.
'Twas a summer's day in winter
The rain was snowing fast
A barefoot boy with shoes on
Stood sitting on the grass.
While the sexton rang the dishrag,
Lard was rendered by the choir,
As the organ peeled bananas,
Someone set the church on fire.
The boy stood on the burning deck,
Whence all but he had fled
The flames that lit the battle's wreck
Shone 'round him o'er the dead.
Why did the boy stand on the burning deck?
Because it was too hot to sit down.

THE TELEPHONE RATE CASE

Objecting to further expenditure of huge sums for useless inventories and appraisals of telephone properties, the Michigan Bell Telephone Company late Thursday filed a petition with the Public Utilities Commission for a hearing as to the necessity for further audit of its books and properties. The Commission has asked the Company for $5,000 toward the expense of bringing the audit and appraisal of the telephone properties up to date in connection with the new rate action, hearings in which were adjourned Thursday until April 27. The petition shows that since 1920 the Company has expended, at the instance of the Commission, approximately $2,000 000 for three appraisals. The final appraisal, made in 1931, 1932 and 1933, cost $1,154,000, and, it is contended, has not even been made a matter of record or otherwise made available. "With all this expense and interference with the normal functioning of the telephone service organization", the petition says, "no substantial practical use has been made by the commission of anything so developed."

The Company contends that now the Commission has a new group of engineer which does not approve the appraisal recently completed by another group of Commission engineers at a cost of more than a million dollars, and the Commission proposes to spend more money to check and bring the appraisal up to date. The company is objecting because it has been [redacted] of 14 [redacted] and [redacted] money, and [redacted] indicates [redacted] of these [redacted] made, at a [redacted] Commission [redacted] for [redacted] expenditures [redacted] of en- [redacted] work. It [redacted] for meeting [redacted] in other [redacted] rates [redacted] point or [redacted] service, [redacted] proportionately at another, the Michigan Bell Company contended, in its answer Thursday to the latest rate action brought by the Commission. The Commission seeks reductions in rural rates, and a flat rate to replace the [redacted] service [redacted] the charge [redacted] the hand or [redacted] that such reductions would result in sufficient added business to more than offset the losses that would be created. It was shown that the Company's rate structure is so designed as to encourage the maximum amount of business economically possible, and is the result of studies made over many years. Rural rates are so far below the cost of furnishing service that the small towns object to carrying the service for the farmers. Losses in the small towns were occasioned largely by the losses on the farm line service. Likewise, telephone users in the larger cities object to carrying the service for the small towns, although service in the rural districts and small towns is essential to the overall telephone service of the state. It also was developed that the greatest losses of telephones in the rural districts have been among those paying the lowest rates.

The rate charged for the hand telephone, it was explained, is considered in designing the entire rate structure. It was claimed that any earnings from such rates help make up the already inadequate total revenue of the Company, and if they are reduced, compensating increases should be made on other items.

The Company further contended that all these matters are included in the rate case already before the Commission.

When your furnace fire goes out for the summer

HOW WILL YOU GET

Hot Water?

Hot water is indispensable for a dozen daily tasks — and with summer almost here, the furnace no longer supplies this needed convenience. Are you obliged to heat water on the stove or run up and down stairs to light a manually-operated tank? End this annoyance and waste of time—install automatic electric hot water service in your home!

A new low rate is being offered for water heating. This is a flat annual rate for year 'round service. You can enjoy automatic electric hot water service for as little as $2.34 a month. You may buy or rent an electric water heater, whichever you choose. Rental rates are low, and if you prefer to buy the heater, convenient monthly terms may be arranged.

With an automatic electric heater, you are assured an abundant and constant supply of water, steaming hot, at a turn of the faucet. Day and night, summer and winter, you have hot water instantly when you need it—for bath and for shower, for shaving, for washing dishes, for the laundry, for housecleaning. There is no waiting, no inconvenience. And you do not need to depend on a furnace coil for hot water, which—contrary to general belief—is an expensive method of heating water, due to the coal burned in the process.

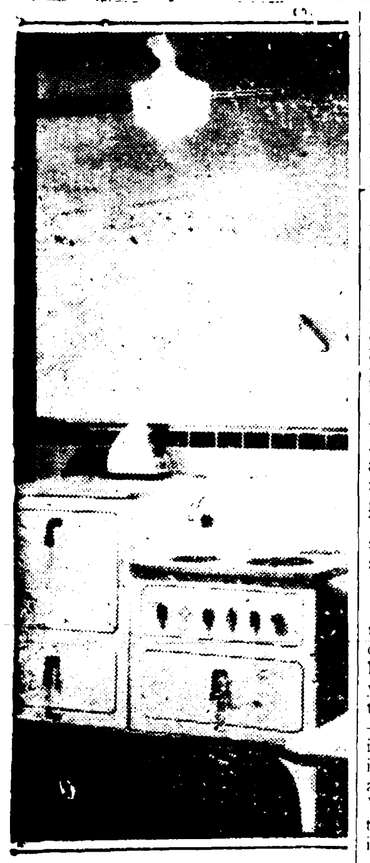
Light for the Kitchen

Helen G. Toland



"Right light will make your stay in the kitchen brighter—and shorter," say scientists who recommend an enclosing glass globe with a 100-watt inside-frosted lamp for the center fixture, with additional lights provided at sink, range and cabinet.

NO matter whether she is her own cook and bottle-washer or not, every woman who manages a home knows that someone must spend several hours of every day in the kitchen. When she knows that good lighting might cut those hours almost in half, she will never be satisfied until she has adequate lighting in her own kitchen.

Light Speeds Work

To prove to her the relation of light to work, science might tell her about the laboratory experiment in which the lighting was doubled and then doubled again, with the result that the rate of working increased 40% for slow workers, 28% for fast workers. So, if Minnie is very slow, good lighting may enable her to do in a couple of hours what she used to take a whole morning to do.

Being eminently practical, science can tell you exactly what you must put into your lighting, to get so much out of it. First comes a center fixture placed close to the ceiling, equipped with a 100-watt inside-frosted or a 150-watt daylight lamp bulb in an enclosing globe of diffusing glass.

Science bids you buy your lamp bulbs with care, for only thus can you be assured that they will be honest servants, giving you full value in light for current received. And remember that bulb finish means something, too. The blue daylight lamp bulbs provide a pure, clear quality of light, but they must be used consistently — everywhere in the kitchen or else not at all. They must also be used the next size larger than the clear or inside-frost lamps recommended for the same place.

In itself, a lamp bulb cannot provide good light for any seeing task. So, as the lamp shades are important for lighting fixtures elsewhere in the house, the enclosing glass globe is important in the kitchen. Through this, the light is sifted and softened; so that our eyes can assimilate and use it for seeing.

Keep Fixtures Clean

Science advises us further that the unit should be washed often, because if dust is allowed to accumulate on it as well as on the ceiling, you may lose as much as 40% of the light for which you are paying—in two ways. Your pocketbook is paying for current which goes into light that is absorbed by dirt, and so never reaches your eyes. Your poor cheated eyes are paying too, with energy stolen from funds intended for useful work.

To speed the tasks of mixing, baking and washing up afterward, there should be additional light provided at sink, range and cabinet. At each of these places, the unit close to the ceiling, carrying a 100-watt lamp bulb (150-watt daylight) in an enclosed globe is considered most desirable, because it is overhead and out of the way.

If this additional ceiling light is not practical, a wall bracket placed above the sink, about five feet from the floor, will prove a likely substitute. The placing of this bracket—five feet from the floor—is somewhat lower than usual, but it will be found a source of never-ending comfort. It is annoying to have to look into a bright electric light all the time you are cooking or washing dishes. Hence the wall bracket should be placed below (or else way above) eye-level. It should carry a 60-watt inside frost (100-watt daylight) lamp bulb, with the light directed down onto the work in hand by an eggshell or bell-shaped shade, made of glass, and as easily cleaned as a china cup.

"Such lighting is bound to make one's stay in the kitchen brighter—and shorter," say scientists.

MEMORIAL

Marcus Thornton Graves, eldest son of James Wesley and Sarah Jane Graves, was born at Stark, Illinois, on November 28, 1868. At the age of 15, joining the Methodist Church at Princeville Illinois, and grew to be a sturdy, respected young man, receiving a high school education in the public schools, and holding office in several different associations.

His marriage to Miss Winifred Foster on November 5, 1901, took place at Peoria, Illinois, where he was employed as a street car conductor. He was affectionately kind in his family life, and from this congenial, happy union, there are surviving five children, Mrs. Helen Boncher, of San Mater California, Nyra of Jackson and Walter, Evelyn and Jean at home. These with Mrs. Graves and a sister and a brother, Mrs. Docia Curfman and Mr. Byron Graves, both Yam Hill, Oregon, and several cousins and other relatives in Illinois mourn his sudden passing as a victim of pneumonia.

About nineteen years ago, the family came from Kansas, where they had gone from Illinois to enter the business of farming, and have since lived on the farm near Pinckney.

Mr. Graves was a member of the Baraca class of the Pinckney Community Sunday School, and held membership in the order of Maccabees, the Modern Woodmen and the Masonic Lodge.

He had held the office of director of school district No. 3 for 17 years and that of Treasurer of the Modern Woodmen for 10 years, proving by these offices of trust the esteem in which he was universally held. Neighbors and friends knew him as a man of sterling worth and kindly ways, who quietly followed in the steps of the Master.

Disarmament

AT THE present time much is heard about disarmament. To the world in general the word means the act of disarming, as by reducing the military or naval force of nations. As the years pass, it is being learned that this taking away or lessening of a material sense of power is not in itself capable of bringing peace. Yet is not peace what the people of the whole world are seeking? The realization of harmony can never be gained while the thoughts of men are filled with envy, hatred, and suspicion. If fear could be eliminated from the thoughts of men, then the host of evil beliefs, expressed in malice, jealousy, and the like, would disappear.

Suppose the right way of thinking, with the consequent blotting out of thoughts of hate, should spread until for the whole human family all sense of hatred had been destroyed. What a change would have come over the world! Indeed, to disarm men of the evil mode of thinking would bring about the peaceful attitude of nations towards one another which people so much desire.

As nations are aggregations of people, each individual in the nations must disarm his own thought of fear and hatred. This true disarmament is not material, but spiritual. If we really desire to have no need for arms, we must begin with ourselves and control our own thoughts.

Those who have learned through the teachings of Christian Science that man is the reflection of divine Love, God, the creator of all that is real, must live consistently with this teaching. They must refuse to think or express thoughts which include hatred. What will be the result? The love expressed in their thinking will be felt by all with whom they associate.

For those who have the correct understanding of Truth, now, not tomorrow or next week, is the time for them to begin by right thinking to a solid basis for its hope, until it finds rest in God.

But what of the future, to which many may be looking with apprehension? Mrs. Eddy, who foresaw Truth's destruction of error, and the disturbance incident thereto, in conditions such as are now testing the courage of mankind, had so clear a vision of the verities of being that she could write in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 66): "Trials are proofs of God's care. . . . Each successive stage of experience unfolds new views of divine goodness and love."

So the forward look should not be a fearful peering into imaginary darkness, but an upward look of joyous anticipation. Travelers cheerfully brave rough roads and hard climbing in order to win a vantage point from which to behold a beautiful view; and pilgrims on the ascending road of experience will find themselves more than compensated for any seeming hardship by the loveliness of spiritual views, constantly being revealed to their clearer gaze. This is true in its most practical sense, as many grateful hearts can testify. Some who in recent years have encountered hardships previously undreamed of declare with sincere gratitude that in every situation, no matter how difficult, there has come to their awakened thought a fresh and sweet realization, a new view of the divine care which is far more tender than that which we associate with the protection of earthly parents. This has resulted from the better understanding of the nature of God brought to them by Christian Science.

The Apostle Paul had planned a missionary journey to Rome, but it was a roundabout way that took him there, and he reached the famous city as a prisoner. But in the long way traveled toward the place of his desire, how many wonderful views he had of God's infinite love and power! That night in the Philippian prison, when he and Silas, their feet in the stocks, sang praises and "the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed"! The rescue from shipwreck and the protection from the bite of the viper at Melita! Paul must indeed have rejoiced as he reviewed these experiences in the quiet of the prison.

So, today, those walking in the clear light of Christian Science will not regret the overturning of human plans, nor hesitate on the brink of unfamiliar experiences; for to them the future signifies further unfoldment of the knowledge of God, a better understanding "of Him whom to know aright is Life eternal" (Science and Health, Pref. p. vii).—The Christian Science Monitor.

Only Fourteen Qualify

Only 250, or less than 20 per cent, were of the type which merited detailed investigation. The amount involved was $9,525,000. After further study of these, the Federal Reserve Bank was forced to turn down the applications of 236, finally offering credit in the sum of $1,417,000 to 14 prospective borrowers. Of this amount, only $806,000 was actually loaned, more than one-half of which was still outstanding many months later. Two of the borrowers went into receivership.

"Since it was the special endeavor of the Federal Reserve Bank to make every possible loan under the emergency provisions of the amendment, and since their best efforts resulted in the extension of so small a sum as to have no effect on the total volume of commercial loans, it is a reasonable assumption that eligible borrowers entitled to bank credit are being provided for by the commercial banks," says the American Bankers Association Journal in commenting on this episode.

It is characteristic, as shown by studies of past business cycles, for changes in the volume of commercial bank credit to follow behind either contraction or expansion of business activity, says a financial writer in the New York Times. This was manifest recently in England's recent recovery where there was a lag between increased business and increased commercial loans.

Howe About:

Using Soldiers Destroying Our Nation John D. Rockefeller

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

By ED HOWE

WE HAVE a good many professional soldiers who live in considerable magnificence and idleness. In our expensive forts cavalrymen devote much time to fancy riding not required in war; army posts are the headquarters of the aristocratic game called polo.

Since we pay an enormous soldier tax, why not make some sensible use of soldiers? Why not distribute squads of them over the country and require them to get exercise by chasing highwaymen, bank burglars, the radicals who bomb peaceful and useful business institutions, and beat up peaceable workmen? Why not a thousand soldier camps instead of a few dozen luxurious ones like the Presidio, a show place in San Francisco? Why not use the fighting men we employ at such terrific expense in maintaining reasonable order in a thousand different communities?

There is a man named Oswald Spengler whose writing one hears a good deal about. His book called "The Decline of the West," is an attempt to prove that the United States is going to the devil, and that nothing can stop it. Mr. Spengler does not specially criticize us for throwing our cookstoves and beds away, and going back to campfires and brush piles, except that his statistics seem to show that while nations always destroy themselves with dissension and false progress, our pace is rather more rapid than has been the rule in national destruction heretofore.

Civilization, Mr. Spengler declares, always destroys itself because people demand too much of it. After a man gets one bath room, and is fairly comfortable in his home, he demands two or three; it was lately charged against a prominent citizen of Texas he had nineteen. Now he has lost not only his nineteen bath tubs, but his house, and the fortune that supported it. His neighbors who had but one bath room took after this aristocrat, and caught him. They are all going to the creek for bathing now but they had an enjoyable fight.

Mr. Spengler believes the special speed we have displayed in going to the devil is due more to our editors than to any other cause. The American newspapers, he charges, have thrown away the brakes and pursue a wide open policy; they drive as fast in everything as their readers drive their new automobiles, and wrecks will inevitably destroy us a little earlier than has been the rule in older civilizations.

A few conservatives are begging for reasonable delay in traveling the road to destruction; for at least as much moderation as the Greek and Romans displayed, but ours is a fast age, and propably we shall continue to step on it.

Considering the many bad things I have known other men to do, I conclude John D. Rockefeller is an exceptionally good man. His father was a runaway, and deserted a good wife and her little children, but John was a good boy, and took care not only of his mother and his younger brothers and sisters, but looked up his father, and helped him, too.

When John had children of his own, he had family prayers, and tried to bring them up right.

The Rockefeller foundation, the greatest philanthropy in the history of the world, is still on its feet, although possibly staggered a little by the recent depression. At ninety-three old John is still pursuing his policy of saying little, and doing much.

In moral conduct, finance, fairness, common sense, his average is higher than that of any other man I know from reading the papers. Of course he has been rich a long time, but this is the most excusable of faults, since every one is trying to be guilty; and I predict that after he has been dead long enough for gossip to get around to the truth (which it always does) his monument will be a little higher than those of Gothe, the poet, Hannibal, the general, or Plato, the philosopher.

After all, it is the Butter and Egg Man who is in position to most influence and better the world by making a high average in the practical things. Writing a bit of poetry, winning a fight, or tossing off a philosophical gem, are small matters compared with the daily Butter and Egg struggle; in this John D. Rockefeller has long been a master, and made an exceptionally high average from a boy of fourteen to an old man of ninety-three.

I have never known anyone not willing to go too far in publicity. President, king, senator, matinee idol, bride, hero, farmer who has killed a wolf, poor boy who has become a prominent business man, always consents to be photographed beyond the point of modesty when the newspapers take after them.

A man cannot always be a gentleman; there is too much of the devil in him, but he can always hope to be a little more gentlemanly tomorrow than he was yesterday, and profit by it.

FEW GET AWAY FROM MEASLES

Disease Just Now Prevalent Has No Favorites.

Practically every case of measles develops a mild "pneumonia."

For many centuries the disease was not differentiated from smallpox.

Nearly every individual in the civilized world has the disease, knowingly or not, at some time.

It recurs in periodic waves, with peaks for each community every two-and-a-half or three years.

It has been one of the most serious scourges of mankind, wiping out whole populations.

These are some of the curious facts pointed out by public health service doctors regarding the disease which has reached the highest peak ever recorded in the United States, with a record of nearly 31,000 simultaneous cases scattered all over the country.

It long has been known that the greatest danger from measles was the possibility of developing pneumonia. But, in a recent study of 900 cases by doctors at Bellevue hospital, New York city, in which X-ray pictures of the chests were taken, every one showed a mild inflammation of the lungs, called "capillary bronchitis," which constitutes mild pneumonia.

The disease first was recognized, it was pointed out, by an Arab doctor named Phazes who lived in the Tenth century. He described it as a mild form of smallpox. Not until late in the Seventeenth century did the English physician, Sudenham, finally distinguish measles from smallpox and scarlet fever.

During the American Civil war the disease broke out in a virulent form in both armies. For the Confederates it constituted one of the major causes of death and was an important factor in depleting the man power of the South. The Union soldiers had a low death rate. It is believed that more of them came from cities where, in common with urban population in general, they had developed a better immunity.

In 1875 a British warship carried measles to the Fiji islands. Within four months 40,000 out of a population of 150,000 were dead. A few years later it was accidentally introduced into Greenland. It almost wiped out the Eskimo population. Ever since, extreme precautions have been taken against allowing an American or European to land on the island.

The cyclic nature of the disease now is thoroughly recognized, according to public health service doctors. These cycles do not embrace the country as a whole but vary with localities.

The measles curve still is rising, according to Assistant Surgeon General R. C. Williams, in charge of the public health service statistics. The peak may be any time between March 1 and May 1. There is no very specific treatment. The micro-organism causing the disease is unknown. It develops its own immunity. Practically every adult is safe from it.

Some of the public health service staff have resorted to the use of a serum made of their own blood as a preventive measure for their children—but the wisdom of this must be decided in each case and is up to the family physician. The efficacy is by no means assured.

Before the days of Phazes nothing is known of the history of measles, but a good deal can be deduced. At one time it must have almost wiped out the human race. Only those survived who were especially resistant to its ravages. They acquired a still greater resistance. In some way they passed on either the natural or the acquired resistance to their children. Countless generations ago such a high resistance had been built up in the white race that a disease once deadlier than smallpox or bubonic plague came to be looked upon as a mild malady of children.

Nearly every one has measles between the ages of two and ten. The older the child, generally speaking, the less danger. A case in an infant under six months is practically unheard of. Every one is given a six months' immunity by the blood of the mother. If it were not for this protective measure a measles epidemic would probably be about as serious a blow as could fall upon a people.

There is a slight variation in virulence from peak to peak. This time the disease is not very virulent. Practically every part of the country is affected. Usually the disease tends to be concentrated in certain localities during a particular peak.

Authority Shows That Beds Preceded Chairs

The bed is the ancestor of the chair. Such is the conclusion of Dr. Walter Hough, head curator of anthropology of the Smithsonian institution. He bases his conclusions on a systematic study of primitive furniture and primitive human postures.

His study of the furniture of the most primitive "houses" shows that rest was the prime motive. First appeared the rudiments of the bed when man learned to interpose some buffer between his body and the hard, cold ground. At first the bed was only a pile of furs, grass or leaves. Then came the banquette, a raised pile of earth, upon which the family lounged and slept. And the banquette was the forerunner of both beds and benches in some parts of the world. The chair made its first appearance in the form of a throne, either as the seat of a king or a god. From this it presumably descended, through various gradations, to become a common article of furniture.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Enjoyment

"Do you enjoy politics?"

"Very much," said Miss Cayenne. "It's interesting to observe leaders of fashion whether the fashions relate to clothes or opinions."

"Two things I wanted-

"...and it was all so simple when I found out my trouble. My physician said I had no organic disease, but I did have what is so commonly and truthfully called a low percentage of hemo-glo-bin in the blood.

"The reasonableness of one of the S.S.S. ads caused me to think that S.S.S. Tonic was just what I needed for my let-down feeling, pimply skin and low resistance. I wanted more strength and a clear skin.

"It didn't take S.S.S. very long to get my blood back up to normal—and as my strength and energy returned my skin cleared up."

If your condition suggests a tonic of this kind, try S.S.S. It is not just a so-called tonic but a tonic specially designed to stimulate gastric secretions, and also having the mineral elements so very, very necessary in rebuilding the oxygen-carrying hemo-glo-bin of the blood.

S.S.S. value has been proven by generations of use, as well as by modern scientific appraisal. Sold by all drug stores...in two convenient sizes...the larger is more economical.

Wash Day Like Any Other Day Now

...Clothes are Whiter—Brighter—Last Longer!

Mrs. Howard S. Jenkins Bastrop, Texas

"Thanks to Oxydol, wash day has become a normal day in our household, and my family is no longer made conscious of its drudgery with makeshift meals and the unnatural disposition of a too tired mother."

THE amazing new discovery of the world's most famous soap experts, the makers of Ivory—this new and improved OXYDOL does these things no other soap can do or has ever done:

(1) Soaks out dirt in 15 minutes. Without boiling or back-breaking rubbing. Hence—cuts washing time 25% to 40% in tub or machine, giving you your afternoon free!

(2) Gets clothes 4 to 5 shades WHITER, by the scientific whiteness-measuring Tintometer test. Whiter EVEN than other granulated soaps (heretofore considered "whitest washing") can do in TWO washings!

(3) Yet, due to its new and improved formula, colors won't fade; fabric won't wear out! Even cotton prints and children's dainty frocks are safe. Yet, despite its amazing cleaning power, it leaves hands soft, finger nails lustrous and uncracked.

Thick 3-inch Suds in Any Water

OXYDOL is specially fitted to water conditions in each district where it's sold. The OXYDOL you get here already contains just the right amount of water-softener to fit the water you use. You can see the results in the suds. OXYDOL multiplies 500 TIMES in suds! Makes rich 3-inch suds in any water, hard or soft!

And OXYDOL is economical. Many ordinary granulated or flake soaps cost 8% to 30% more for the same amount of soap. OXYDOL gives you in some cases a third more soap for the same money.

Make This Test

Get OXYDOL today from your grocer and make this two-way test: (1) With a ruler, measure OXYDOL's thick suds and compare with the suds made by your usual soap—note how long they last: (2) watch the clock to prove to yourself that OXYDOL does soak out the dirt in 15 minutes!

THE NEW AND IMPROVED OXYDOL MULTIPLIES 500 TIMES IN SUDS

City Banks, Too

"If the loans of a bank in a manufacturing or merchandising field show a smoothly running coordination with production and distribution they, too, mirror a healthy economic situation. Or there may be here also signs that reflect growing unfavorable conditions, such as excessive loan renewals, over-enthusiasm and therefore over-expansion of credit extended to makers or dealers in particular products, and similar circumstances. Similar conditions apply to banks engaged in financing the activities of the securities markets.

"The foregoing is merely suggestive of the infinite aspects of the life outwardly surrounding the banks which form and control their internal conditions. Although these facts seem obvious enough, the discussions and criticisms that have raged about the banks often appear to set them apart as somehow separate from the lives of our people, casting forth a malignant influence upon agriculture, industry and trade from forces generated wholly within themselves.

"The truth of the matter is that the fate of the banks is inseparably interwoven with the fate of the rest of the people and of the nation. What happened to the country happened to the banks and what happened to the banks is in no way different or detached from what happened to the people. They are all part of the same pattern, of the same continuous stream of events. No one element in that stream can be called the cause of business depression.

"If the banks caused trouble to some of our people it was because they were irresistibly forced to pass on troubles that came to them from other people. These troubles impaired the values of their securities and customers' notes—and rendered some unable, in turn, to pay back to other customers their deposits that had been properly used to create these loans and investments. Unless these truths are kept continually in mind there is no such thing as approaching an understanding of the banking problem or of properly safeguarding the very heavy stake of the public in that problem."

By his words and works Christ Jesus, the Way-shower for mankind, revealed that it is always practical to seek first and always to do the will of the Father. His life demonstrated that such simple trust in God is the only really profitable investment and is entirely practical in human experience. No one, before or after Jesus' time, has ever shown forth, as did he, the wealth and profit which such an investment produces. His
