Gen: B. F. Partridge of Bay City, has just received the sword lost by him twenty-one years ago when he was wounded in the battle at Peeble's Farm, Va. The sword was found by Capt. Hereford of Virginia, who took measures to find Gen. Partridge's friends after the war, even advertising the circumstances in some Michigan papers. Hereford finally left the sword with Geo. Miller, deputy sheriff of a county in Texas, and through W. D. Wylie, commander of the department of Texas G. A. R., the sword is just returned to Ralph W. Cummings post of Bay City. Gen. Partridge is much rejoiced over the recovery of the valued memento.

The Michigan department of the G. A. R. leave for Portland, Me., June 18. Gen. Alger and staff accompany the party from Detroit. At Port Huron, delegations from interior towns join the excursion. The party will quarter at Old Orchard Beach near Portland Tickets will be on sale June 15, good for & days. The fare is $20 for the round trip from Detroit, and equally reduced rates are given form interior points. Information regarding the trip can be had by addressing O. F. Lockwood, Flint, Mich.

The state board of agriculture has been considering the desirability of placing a small herd of Hereford cattle on the agricultural college farm for some time. Recently President Wells and Prof. Johnson were instructed to attend the sale of Burleigh & Bodwell at Dexter park, Chicago, May 19 and 20, and purchase two or three females and a bull. The cattle reached the college on Saturday last and are regarded as good specimens of this popular beef breed. The lot embraces two cows, one twoyear-old heifer and one bull calf four months old. They were all imported last season. A polled Angus bull calf for experimental feeding was also purchased of the same firm. At the sale of T. Corwin Anderson of Kentucky, May 21, a 10-months shorthorn bull was selected-the Second duke of Sideview. He is very finely bred and will, it is hoped, prove a valuable addition to the college herd of shorthorns. -Lansing Republican.

A dispatch received from Calcutta on the 3d inst. says: Reports of a fearful earthquake in Cashmere have just been received. Since Sunday terribly destructive shocks have occurred at intervals of about 10 minutes. The loss of life is enormous, but is at present unknown. The cavaly barracks at Serinagur, the capitol of Cashmere, have been destroyed. Fifty of the inmates were killed outright, and a great number wounded. One part of the city has been entirely demolished, and many hundreds of people are supposed to buried in the ruins. Definite information is unattainable, as the place is almost deserted, the citizens having become panic-stricken and fled. The river which flows through Serinagur, as well as the iake of Cashmere, is crowded with boats which are packed with refugees. Many others have sought shelter in hastily erected huts and tents outside the walls. Hundreds of animals have been killed, and the destruction of property is enormous. The distress which prevails is appalling, and the dispatches which brought the first intelligence of the disaster contained urgent appeals for assistance. At last accounts the seismic disturbances continued unabated, and the complete destruction of the city of Serinagur was imminent.

A ROCK ON A GRAVE.

CHAPTER I.

The quiet village of Wykleph, like the quiet village of any other name, was always anxious when a stranger made his appearance. This anxiety. ever attended by sharply manifested suspicion, becomes painfully acute, when everything upon which it was hoped an investigation can be hinged shrinks from assuming substance into an established shadow. I lived during one season in the village of Wykleph. I had lived in the roaring noise of a rushing city, and the quiet air of the village was a relief to me. I did not attempt to enter society, but after awhile, the leaders of the social realm invited me to participate in a church festival, a distinction which bled me pretty freely. The cost of a lovely smile at a church fair above market quotation, for these coy partings of lips are very dear, indeed.

I had just returned from the fair and was arranging an armful of flowers, when some one knocked at my

"Come in," I called.

I don't know that I have ever seen a more handsome man than the man who entered the room. Tall and well formed, well dressed and at graceful ease, he was truly a man calculated to win immediate admiration. "Be seated," said I, placing a handful of roses in a vase. He sat down, crossed his legs, dropped one arm over the back of the chair on which he sat, and, after a few moments of silence, during which he surveyed me closely but not impu/ dently, said: "You must excuse me for calling upon you at an hour so unseemly./' "No apoligies necessary," I replied. I must have given him an unintended look of inquiry for he shifted his posi-

"Don't be impatient. I skall soon explain, that is, so far as I am able to explain something which really admits of no solution. A few moments ago, I saw you at a church fair. I suppose it was a church fair, for, as I stopped near the door, I saw many smiles that were bringing a much larger price than they could have brought at a more profane auction. I don't know why. but I singled you out and watched you until you entered this house. I have just arrived. I don't know why I came to this place, but now that I am here, I know not where I shall put up. I suppose, however, that I must put up with anything I can get. I applied at a little hotel, down the street, but it is a place of such utter cheerlessness that a sojourn of two hours within its walls would depress me into the deepest melancholy. Now, I come to you for advice. Whither must I go?"

A looked at him closely. His face was as frank as the face of a child, of a child that has not exchanged the openness of nature for the slyness of introducing myself. I am Charles Madison. Your name, please?" "I am John Talbert," I replied.

"Ah, I am glad to meet you, Mr. Talbert. Some time has elapsed since we saw each other last, Talbert. Let me_see, the last time I saw you, my dear fellow, you came to my room one night after having become disgusted with the hotel. I had a bed and a lounge. 'John,' said I, 'you may take the bed or the lounge, it makes no difference which.' 'Well,' you replied, 'I'll take the bed.' Now, Talbert, I will not rob you of your bed, but will be satisfied with the lounge.

By this time I was staring at him. He burst into a loud laugh; and after indulging his boisterous mirth, said:

"Look here. Talbert, confound it. you see how I am situated. You are certainly not afraid of me. You see have ever seen. On one occasion every cure other quarters. Come, don't be hard on a stranger.",

"Madison—" "That's the way to talk." "You may stay."

"Give me your hand, old fellow. Oh, I know a man when I see him. Let me take off my coat. I see that you have a number of pipes. I have a lot of excellent tobacco.'

We talked and smoked until nearly daylight. I had never met so pleasant a companion.

CHAPTER II.

*The introduction which I had received into the society of Wykleph, although it was flattering, by no means destroyed the interest which I had formerly taken in the outside world. The truth is, I longed for a companion. The good-natured young men of the village possessed no interest for me. I found in Madison such a genial associate that I offered to share my room with him. He accepted the offer.

"I have no business," he said. "I am an aimless roamer—a consumer instead of a producer-still I am not without means. I have a few dollars, and to make this arrangement less burdensome to you and more agrecable to me, I will pay half of all expenses.'

"All right, Madison." "Consider it the Monroe doctrine,

"Commendably democratic," I replied. "Now, Talbert, we must consult each other before expenditures, not strictly necessary, are made."

"All right." "In the first place, I must call for an appropriation. I do not thing that our library is sufficient to meet the demands of an intellectual society. There is one book-store in town. All the books are old for I don't suppose a volume of print was ever sold here. Say, before a forget it. Do you know why/ this town has the best whisky of any town I have ever struck?" "No. 1 do not."

"Because it/attains such great age before it can reach this place. Well, now, about the library. Suppose I buy about fifty dollars worth of books?''

"All right." He bought the books, selecting them with excellent taste. He spent the most of his time in the room, crowding his head, as he termed it.

"Madison," I one day remarked, 'you are the most avaricious seeker of knøwledge I have ever seen."

"My dear fellow," he replied, put-ting aside a volume of "Buckle's Civflization," "I am not seeking knowledge. I am seeking entertainment." Then why do you not read lighter matter?"

"Because it is not interesting. Perfect entertainment is mental engagement, an absorption that shuts out all knowledge of surroundings. We canemploy a third of his strength, but to effort. When I read something deep, meaning, affords me perfect enjoy-

"So you do not expect to make use of the knowledge thus acquired."

"Probably not. We do not contemplate the use of the muscle we acquire in a gymnasium, though it sometimes comes into good play. "You are a strange fellow, Madi-

"Not at all. I am useless, but my dear fellow, the useless man is not the strange man, for he is natural."

Do you mean to say that it is man's nature to be useless?" "Of course it is. All worth in man is artificial."

"What about woman?" "Now you've got me. I don't undersand her. It is strange that a man, writing a novel, will give us chapter after chapter of feminine introspection, when in fact it is all supposition with him. Nobody but a woman knows what a woman thinks; "Bad—the one you have not, and nobody but a man can know what a man would think."

"Yet, Madison, some of the strongest male characters ever portrayed were drawn by George Eliot.'

"You think they are strong, and berhaps they are, but it was guess work with George Eliot. She talked with great wisdom, with wisdom so much deeper than any thought which her average reader and the most prom-"You have a bed and a lounge in | inent critic—who is always a fool could exercise, that they accepted her profound sayings as the utterances of almost superhuman insight."

"Could not Dickens portray the character of woman?'

"He could photograph her, that's all. You would recognize the woman because the picture was correct, but his art failed him when he attempted feminine introspection."

"Madison, you are a literary cynic." "Not at all. The literary cynic sees nothing good in literature. I see a world of good in it."

"You do not, however, acknowledge its truth.''

"No, but I acknowledge its thought, and in all thought there is good. Now. there's John Stauart Mill. There is much good in him because there is much thought, still, his philosophy is as honey-combed as a rusty canon."

Thus, our days and the greater part of our nights were spent. Madison, putting aside a book, would sit during hours of profound meditation. At such time his face was the saddest I jumped as though a knife had been stuck into his heart.

CHAPTER III.

I was called into the country, to be absent two days. I asked Madison to accompany me, but he excused himself, saying that he had on hand a piece of business which could not longer be neglected. I returned late eat night. A storm was raging. Houses creaked. The village streets were my room. "Madison has not gone to bed," I mused.

The door was ajar. I gently shoved it open. Great God! Madison was stretched upon the floor. His arms were folded across his breast. His eyes, in awful glare, were turned upwards. He was dead-cold and stiff. I rushed out and tried to arouse the neighors, but the storm raged so fiercely that no one heard me. Horrified, I sat on a stairway, trembling at the thought of again entering my reom. At last morning came. The town was soon in a state of excitement. To the people of Wykleph, nothing was more interesting than death.

On my bureau, weighted down with a silver-clasped bible, I found the following letter:

"MY DEAR JOHN: I have transacted the business which could not longer be neglected. Let me make an awful revelation. I used to live in New York state. My parents were wealthy. When I was about twenty-one years of age, I became engaged to a young woman whom I dearly loved. My faith in her was as strong as the faith that a fanatic reposes in his religion. I can see her face now, beautiful and dewy with the tears of tenderness. I left home on a visit. When I returned, my father asked me to walk dut in the woods with him. Then he told me that Logenia-my Logenia-was on the eve of marrying a man whom I despised. I would not believe it. In passionate haste I ran across the fields, and rushed into the cottage where Logenia lived. She said that it was true. It was the story of which all romance is tired. She had tried to love me, but could not. She had thought that she loved me but she had at last discovered that she did not. Three days afterwards, that girl and the man whom I despised were married. I saw them when they got into a buggy. I saw them take the narrow road that wended its way along the mountain side. I would see them when they thought that no one was looking. I would conceal myself on the mountain, and gaze at them as they passed. I hid behind a large rock. a short distance above the road. They came along, driving slowly. Just as they were opposite me, she put her arms around him. With all my might I shoved the rock. Down it went, bounding from one projection to another, and fell in front of the horse. Frightened, he sprang to one side. not bring all of a mind to bear against | Then there was nothing in the roadsomething light. A man can roll a save the big rock that I had dislodged. keg with such ease that he does not The horse, the buggy, the man whom I despised and Logeniaroll a hogshead requires his nightiest all had gone over the precipice. I heard her shriek. I wish I could the effort required to catch the full have heard the man groan. I hastened home. When the calamity was discovered, people said that it was a terrible accident. No one suspected me. Since then Livave been in hell. Not a moment's peace have I seen. I have roamed nearly everywhere. My parents died within a few months of each other, and I turned the entire estate into money. With the money I have done some little good, but the larger part of it has been wasted. In the left-hand corner of my trunk you will find enough money to pay the expenses of my burial. I have long been determined to put myself out of > the way, just so soon as my resources dwindled to a certain amount. I have swallowed the poison. A violent storm is raging. I hardly know whether it is within me or without doors. Now you know who I am. The name, Logenia, is a fictitious name. The girl's true name was Susan. She was your sister. My name is Gray.

It was a long time before I recove ered from the shock. I had known Louis Gray when I was a boy; and was the murderer of my sister. I was not at home, when the tragedy occurred. My mother, in a tearful letter, told me of Susan's marriage-how she and her husband had been killed by a vicious horse that leaped over a precipice.

We buried Madison-by which name I still remember him-under a spreading tree, at the foot of a mountain. The other day when I visited the place, I saw that a great rock hau rolled from the mountain and had fallen on his grave.—Opie P. Read, in Arkansaw Traveler.

Several very efficient electric gaslighters have for some time past been before the public. In one of these a button is pressed, which sets in motion a vulcanite arrangement, thereby exciting frictional electricity, and causing a train of sparks to appear at the top of the instrument. These sparks will readily fire the gas. Another contrivance contains within it a bar of zinc and one of carbon, together with an exciting fluid, which is only brought into contact with them when the instrument is inverted. Directly this occurs, a thin platinum wire becomes red hot, and the gas can be lighted. A modification of this latter arrangement is for the purpose of detecting gas-escapes without the usual catastrophe. It consists of a similar plathat I shall not despoil your lounge, sign of life left him. Miners Send to Hungary for Wives and Are Much Pleased With Them.

New York Morning Journal.

Castle Garden was the scene of much bustle and exitement recently. For two days one could not but notice the appearance of twenty-four solid-looking men whose faces plainly bespoke their anxiety. They were miners and employed in the coal mines of Maunch Chunk, Penn. Their presence at the Garden was considerable of a mystery, and until the arrival of the steamship Werra all were at a loss to explain their presence.

With the arrival of the Werra, however, the mystery was cleared up, and one of the strangest scenes ever witnessed in Castle Garden was enacted.

As the 418 steerage passengers of the Werra were landing twenty-five redcheeked and flaxen-haired maidens, ranging in age from 17 to 21, with top boots up to their knees, were seen to take precedence of the other passengers and nervously walk down the gang plank to the Garden.

As they filed along the narrow entrance and registered their names with the clerks they cast furtive glances at the group of twenty-five hornyhanded sons of toil who were impatiently awaiting their arrival.

No sooner had they gone through the formula of being registered at the Garden than they all made a grand rush for the group of men, who received them with open arms.

The unusual spectacle was explained to a reporter by one of the miners. who said:

"These young ladies are from Kossuth, in Hungary, and our party is from Maunch Chunk, in Pennsylvania. It is impossible for us to secure suitable companions of our own nationality where we are employed, so about three months ago we all clubbed together and sent an agent to Kossuth, where the population of women greatly exceeds that of the men, for the purpose of bringing to this country twenty-five nice looking and healthy young women who are not afraid of work and who desire to get married. The man who selected the girls is Mr. Janson and you see the result of his trip. For my part I think he has done nobly. If you know of twenty-five nicer looking girls than are in that group you can do more than I can. You see we are forming a little village of our own and our experience with American girls has been very discouraging. They seem to be afraid of us, so we just combined and sent over money sufficient to bring these girls over and now we are going to marry them." "How do you intend selecting them?"

inquired the reporter. "Oh, that was all fixed weeks ago. You see, we drew lots to see who would have first choice, and I won No. 3. I have chosen that little girl with the black eyes and hair. She is short, but just look at her arms; she is as strong as a horse, and don't you think she is pretty?"

"When I asked her if she thought she could be contented with me and grow to like me she laughed all over her face. Her name is Bertha Hillern, and she is her already. Come over and drink a glass of lager with us."

The reporter went over to the corner where the good-natured George Metzger presides and talked to the pretty Bertha, who was seated on a bundle of clothing. Her conversation translated was to the effect that she was delighted at the prospect of securing a husband and a good home at the same time. As she sipped her lager she said that she was sure that she would like her intended husband and that she would do all in her power to make him happy. She expected to go into the mines with him and work as well as to take care of their little home.

The fifty happy persons departed on the 6 p. m. train for Mauch Chunk, to be married on the arrival at their future home.

A Talk With Bismarck. From the St. James's Gazette.

Count Bela Szechenyi recently had an interview with Prince Bismarck containing certain disclosures of a sufficiently remarkable character: Referring to the international situation at the present moment, Prince

Bismarck, if his interview is to be believed, took credit to himself for all the now departures recently witnessed in the policy of the chief Cabinets of Europe. Everything, he gave his Hungarian visitor to understand, was really due to his instigation, to his diplomacy, or else to his intrigue. "As for France," said the Chancellor, "I have contrived to get her well occupied out in China. Then, as regards the supremacy of Britain in maritime and colonial affairs. I am engaged in the task of counterbalancing or neutralizing it." Turning to Germany's allies, Prince Bismarck proceeded: "If Russia desires to take Armenia or Afghanistan, she will not have to languish for them long in vain. And then, with reference to Austria and Hungary, the policy of the dual empire," he said, "is of course ultimately to annex Syria." And the chancellor was good enough to hint that he would take care that any little wish Austria might cherish in that direction might be grat-"There, said the chancellor, "the Hun- mein abroad about five years."

garians are greatly to blame. They are foolishly spending enormous sums on their one port at Finme, instead of which they should seek to enrich themselves in settlements abroad." Upon Count Szecheneyi intimating that the Hungarians disliked the policy of the German Kulturkampf, the prince reremarked: "That is a policy which I cannot abandon. To give it up would enable Austria to regain her predominance at the petty courts of Germany. However, I am not opposed in principle to restoring Rome to the pope, and the restoration will be carried out if Italy proceeds to make war against Turkey, with a view to the conquest of Tripoli." This last threat is only another proof of the irritation of the German chancellor at the friendliness Italy has been showing to England.

It seems to be still considered proper, for some reason not entirely clear, to keep up the pretense that Mr. Blaine did not care for the Presidential nomination last year. The Commercial Gazette even presumes to say "there is proof of the fact" that Mr. Blaine would have preferred Logan's etery at Six Corners the tribute to a nomination to his own. Of course it | dead friend was fittingly paid. The is a matter of little importance now, local preacher not being at home the after the battle has been fought and party were soon at Fowlerville, where lost. But the question arises, upon this suggestion, why Mr. Blaine's alleged preference was not distinctly made known to his friends and firmly adhered to?

A good many medical gentlemen of some note in this country have been proceeded with them into the presence expressing the belief recently that cholera is not a vaccinable disease. They give their reasons, which are nodoubt ably scientific. But actual experiments are better than any statements of opinion. Dr. Ferran's tests in Spain are important. It is assertthat Alcira, a town of 9,000 inhabitants, showed the following results from this occasion by the cravings of from May 1 to May 18. Persons inoculated for the first time, 7,128; inoculated twice, 3,011; inoculate once ing of retreshments. Therefore, when and subsequently attacked by cholera set down in the highway not over nalf 7. During the voung wife and her schoolmate made same 18 days "seventy-three cases of cholera occurred at Alcira among persons not inoculated, and thirtynine of these were fatal?' Dr. Ferran's faith in the success of inoculation is apparently well founded, the doubts of the Syanish Government to the contrary notwithstanding.

When General Crook captured the raiding Apaches two years ago, settling in the Southwest strenuously urged that these wild beasts should receive punishment commensurate to their horrible crimes. But General Crook, who believes in mild methods of dealing with the Indians, turned a deaf ear to the popular appeal for severe measures and induced the Government to allow the cut-throats er. to go quietly back to their reservation. Even the leader of the redhanded marauders, Gevonimo, was not punished. The result of this remarkable leniency is seen in the recent outbreak of the same band. These Indians have again practiced atrocities the mere mention of which sets the blood of civilized people aflame with indignation and rage. Some of the raiders have been captured, while most of them have probably escaped to the mountains of Mexico. General Crook is still in command of the Federal troops on the border. The duty devolves upon him of co-operating with the Mexican authorities to capture the entire force of Apache assasins. The work he will no doubt undertake with the utmost zeal, for General Crook is a brave and capable officer. When Geronimo and his followers shall have been retaken, the further duty will devolve upon General Crook of shandoning his old notions about effloacy of gentleness in dealing with savages. As for the Indians now prisoners, there ought to be no delay n making them feel the iron hand of justice.

ROMANCE IN MARION.

The usually quiet town of Marion was thrown into a full sized ripple of excitement last week when the facts developed in a certain elopement case. The parties to the affair are, or were, Aaron Westmoreland, a frisky lad of thirty-three summers, and Lena Eliot, who had experienced the starms of sixteen winters. This romanticly inful day for their episode, the fresh young would-be bride going to school as usual, like a good girl. However. There is a plain line between of she did not delve much in intricate problems that day for her mind was occupied with love's young dream. At an appointed hour her gay Lothario called and accompanied her, as the teacher and triends were led to believe, to the grave of a deceased female mound. A girl schoolmate was persuaded to accompany them, little thinking they had designs to make her a bridesmade. The bridal party had driven about two miles when overtaken by a half-brother of the groom to be. The young lady friend was prevailed upon to ride with the new arrival. Proceeding to the cemit dawned upon the astonished schoolmate that she was one of a bridal party, whereupon she issued a proclamation that she would proceed no further. The tearful suplications of the would-be bride, however, soon forced her resolution out of sight and she of Rev. J. Kilpatrick, who tied the nuptials with his utmost serenity and grace. The schoolmate again rebelled when requested to sign her name as a witness to the ceremony and a fifth

TIMELY TOPICS.

THE proprietor of a household article recently informed the publisher of a well-known monthly magazine of large circulation that the insertion of a small advertisement twice in the pages of their magazine had brought in more than eight thousand inquiries. And yet some people are still wondering if who had been born in Andalusia, newspaper and magazine advertising Spain, and whose ancestors there, up pays.

THE fiendish deeds committed by the raiding Apaches in New Mexico cast into the shade the most blood-curdling stories of the vellow covered novels of the day, from the fact that the tales of murder and cruelty unparalleled are true. Now if ever, is there truth and my mother's family (not necessarin the saying that "the only good lily her Christian) name is as French as Indian is a dead Indian." Certain it is that if this statement is too broad, it is reasonable to say that the only good Apache is a dead one. This recent raid here, but whose father had as ancesof the Apaches should arouse the persons in charge of that department of our governmental work to decisive and siding in Louisians, but born in prompt action to quell these periodical outbreaks, and the only way it can be done is by the complete annihilation of the whole tribe.

THAT our legislators are cognizant of the demoralizing influence of much of the so-called "literature" scattered broadcast throughout the land and so greedily devoured by our young, is evident from the unaminity with which they voted for the bill to suppress the sale of obscene, viscious and immoral never from French and Anglo-Saxon books. The provisions of the law are stringent, and their enforcement will do much to stay the flood of crime scendant of the Latin races. None of which is so swiftly drawing our young | their members have emerged | from into its seething vortex. To this one | England, Ireland, Nova Scotia, Canagency may be traced the wreck of many bright young lives, whose downfall has brought desolation to many happy homes. Many bright, intelligent boys have grown to years of maturity with mind undisciplined and intellectdwarfed from long indulgence in the perusal of books and papers, the tendency which is always downward.

In an address before the national conference of charities and corrections held rectly as their American brethren, in in Philadelphia recently, Charles Dudley | business or society—but, when at Warner said the one most necessary thing in the management of reformatory institutions in this country is discipline, | American household only. A differmoral and intellectual. If this is true ence in this respect, however, must Birge Harrison, in Harper's Magazine in places where men and women are confined for punishment, how much more important is it that discipline, ties, are less acquainted with the Engmoral, intellectual and physical, be enforced in homes, schools and workshops where the young are. This course, wisely followed, would very perceptibly decrease the number in the prisons and reforma ories of the land. and instead of criminals give us useful, law-abiding citizens. More work done with the youth of to-day will render unnecessary much of the work that is now being done inside the prison walls. Discipline is necessary for the attainment of right results, and at no time in life can the inculcation of the lesson be so well done as in youthful years.

THE case of the boy in Milwaukee who swallowed the trade dollar several weeks ago is attracting much attention. He was at the last reports still alive, and apparently getting on very much better than was expected, although all attempts to dislodge the dollar had failed. That so large an object of such a nature could remain in the stomach or bowels without producing intense suffering and death seems almost incredible; hence the physicians are watching the case with great curiosity. It is, however, stated, on good au. thority, that a man who swallowed a large jack-knife a good many years ago in a drunken freak, lived for years afterward, and did not suffer any great inconvenience; and at his death the remains of the knife, with its blades and are they then called Creole negroes metal parts nearly all gone, were found in contradistinction of their American in his intestines, where thay had not produced any serious disorder. Judg ing by this and other recorded cases the doctors will be able to relieve the 1 Milwaukee boy of the trade dollar only by a delicate and dangerous operation. It is reported that the dollar has been located and that an attempt will be made to open the stomach and take the

WHO ARE THE CREOLES!

Those of Louisians, and Particularly of New Orleans.

Owing to the many interpretations which the word Creole has received in countries where the Creoles are not known, several writers have given their definitions and conceptions, who claimed that these were correct because they had been "there." But, I am a Creole, and I have failed to meet a single one which was faithful to the traditions which the word ought to convey elsewhere and does imply at home. I am a Creole for no other reason than because my father is an American citizen, born in Louisiana, from the marriage of his father, who was also born in Louisiana from a father who resided in Louisiana, but the ladder, were all Spaniards—and my family (not necessarily my Christian) name is as Spanish as can be. Now, on the maternal side I am a Creole, because my mother was born in Louisiana, from the marriage of her mother, also born in Louisiana from a mother who was residing in Louisiana, but who had been born in the French colonial possessions, and whose ancestors up the ladder were all French. can be. On the maternal side, my father's mother was born here in Louisiana from a father also born here, whose father was a German, residing tors persons up the ladder all born in Germany. On the paternal side now, my mother had for father a man re-France, whose ancestors were all French, and whose name was as French as could be. But both on my father's and mother's side no language has been spoken since the birth of those of their ancestors as were born in Louisiana, from the association originally which Louisiana had with France before it was ceded to the United States, except the French language, which has uniformly been that of the family circle and family hearth. My genealogy is the genealogy of every Creole of Louisiana. We are all born from French and Spanish or from French and German parentage, but parentage, but often from French and Italian affiliation. Whence it follows that the Creole is essentially a deada, or the colonial States of this country when under the domination of Great Britain. The distinguishing feature, then, between the Creole and American is that one negatives and the other derives from an Anglo-Saxon ancestry. •

The two races merely differ as to their ancestral origin; as to the rest, the Creoles and Americans of Louisiana are as wealthy as the other, as cultivated and refined, as educated and polished, as political and commercial as the other, and they all speak the English language as corhome, in the family circle and at the family table, the Creoles speak but | French. English prevails in the be drawn between the New Orleans for May. Crebies and the Creoles of the country parishes—the latter, with less facililish language, and speak exclusively French, with but few exceptions their newspapers being almost universally published in French, whereas, in New Orleans, where the Creoles, in a population of 250,000, number about, and well nigh, 100,000 thereof, they have but one newspaper published in their ancestral language. They have held, and continue to hold, with their American brethren, the highest offices of State and parochial importance, from the Governor down.

The present Governor is an American: his predecessor was a Creole of French, German and Spanish origin. The present Lieutenant Governor and two of the Justices of the Supreme Court, one of whom the Chief Justice thereof, are all Creoles of German, Spanish and 'Cadian-French origin, so that, in the Creoles, the French is the distinguishing element in Louisiana, and the Anglo-Saxon is the characteristic feature of the American citizen of Louisiana. The Creoles of Louisiana are noted for their hospitality, high sense of honor and domestic habits. They are the true conservative element, and are all Roman Catholics, without exception. They speak French as correctly and grammatically as in Paris or Lyons, and Frenchmen coming here on business or recreation are surprised to see how this is so justly so. Many Creoles of position annually travel to France, Hatchet. and seldom go elsewhere. There are, now, what are called the Creole negro. I have been speaking of the Creole whites. No such lineage as Latin parentage can of course, be ascribed to the negro race in Louisiana or elsewhere. Why negro brethren? Simply for this, that when slavery existed such negroes as were the slaves of Creole families and were taught their language, customs and manners were proud, after the war, of declaring that they were of Creole origin, as they were ignorant of their natural origin, and those negroes who had been the slaves of the American families of Louisiana of Anglowas drunk. Don't talk to me, if you saxon descent were naturally inplease. I understand my business. clined to call themselves American Deceased was killed by whisky."—45-

There is in Louisiana another class of negroes, belonging neither to the Creole nor American element, who never were slaves, and who, therefore, have their own genealogy and peculiarities, and are more refined than their colored former slave brethren. The Creole negro has a gibberish of his own, called in Louisiana patois. It is of French perfume, but is a bouquet of language, composed of words of almost every language, but principally of simplified French, of a French vocabulary which spells as spoken, and which is spoken as provincially invented by their authors, the city Creole negro, and his fellow-citizen, the country Creole negro, having their peculiar negro-French patois idioms, but in the main alike. Every white or colored Creole speaks English and French, the higher and wealthier classes with more correctness and refinement, as a matter of course, whereas every white or colored American of Louisana speaks almost exclusively English, although many understand and read French tolerably well.—Cor. Times-Democrat.

The Penitentes.

This society, until it is crushed out, will remain an effectual barrier to the progress of morality and good order in New Mexico. It was founded at Santa Cruz in 1693 by the old Francis can missionaries. It was originally intended as a means of bringing the whole population within the pale of the church, and its principal dogma was that no sin could be forgiven without confession and expiation. As time were on, and the society became independent, it added dogmas of its own. One of these, the inverse of the above, was that no sin could be so great but that a sufficient expiation would purge it away. There are twenty thousand Penitentes, and as they are mutually sworn to assist and protect one another, even to the extent of perjury, it will readily be seen what a formidable hydra the New Mexican judges have to deal with. It is only the powerful influence of their priests that keeps them at all within bounds.

The public services of expiation are held once a year, in Holy-week. There is never any lack of expiants. An image of the Virgin is placed in the centre of the church, or in the campo santo before it, and the ground for many yards in front of it is strewn knee-deep with cactus, whose poisonous spines will sometimes pierce the heaviest soled shoe. Through this bed of living thorns the Penitentes march with naked feet or crawl along on bare knees, calling piteously ali the while to the Virgin for forgiveness of their sins. As if this were not sufficient, they scourge themselves with great bunches of cactus tied together on a thong, and slash themselves with knives. The natural result of these horrible exercises is a death now and then, and many maimed and pitiable creatures who drag out a miserable existence for the remainder of their days. In one of the little chapels we visited, the whitewashed walls were splashed with blood to the height of six or eight feet. Monsignor Lamy, the present enlightened Archbishop of New Mexico, has made strenuous efforts to abolish this evil, but so strongly is it intrenched in the customs of the people that he has met with but little success in his efforts.—

New Use for a Bull

"Look out for that bull, partner! He's a bad one." The speaker picked up a pitchfork as he made the remark. He was on his farm and the bull was his ball. The person addressed was a well-known tobacco buyer of this city, who had driven to the lower end of the country to buy a fresh supply.

The farmer had stored his tobacco crop in a shed at the end of the barn, inaccessible except through the barnyard. The bull seemed to resent this intrusion, and looked daggers, or rather horns, at the city man. The farmer motioned at the bull with the pitchfork, and the animal kept at a respectful distance, but followed them to the door all the same.

"I'll give you 10 cents for wrappers for the lot," said the man from town. "Ten cents!" replied the farmer. "That there is good tobacco. I don't care about selling it now if I can't get more than that for it."

"Well, I guess we can't trade," said the city man, turning toward the door. The ball, just outside, lowered his head as the stranger appeared. The pitchfork, which had been left standing outside the door, had fallen under the bull's feet. The stranger quickly

"I'll give you 12 cents," said he "No," replied the farmer, curtly, as he lighted his pipe and sat down on the floor. He seemed to have forgotten all about the bull. There was a pause, during which the bull's heavy | PRICE. No. 1 for family of 6..... $88 breathing could be heard.

More negotiations followed, but the farmer was obdurate. He didn't seem to care to sell the tobacco at all, and there was nothing in particular to call him back to the house. So he began to tinker with some repairs to the shed. "Confound it!" muttered the Lancaster man under his breath; "I wish that infernal bull would go away." But the bull staid right there.

"I'll give you fourteen cents," said he, turning to the farmer again. "Twenty cents is my price, sir," replied the monarch of the soil, in a tone of injured innocence, as though a little hurt at being suspected of sharp practice in fixing a bigger price than he wanted and then coming down. The bull gave an impatient snort.

Conversations relating to 16 cents, then to 18 were held, but without result. The bull didn't go away, and neither did the farmer. Nor did the farmer of it in the highest terms, saying that they would Lancaster man, though he wanted to.

Celinioid Versus Linen.

"Celluloid cuffs and collars are worn more generally now, than ever before," said a wholesale and retail dealer on Broadway to a reporter.

"How do you account for that fact?" "It is simply a question of economy. Washing now is high. It costs almost as much to launder a pair of linen cuffs and collars as it does to buy them. The celluloid articles can be cleaned perfectly at no cost within two minutes. When celluloid cuffs were first made they were too thick and rattled too audibly when they came in contact with any hard substance. This was quite objectionable. But now those manufactured are so thin and pliable and so much like linen that few people could detect their quality unless they felt them."

"Do you sell them principally in New York?"

"A great celluloid trade is done in the west. The washerwomen out there must be either bad or hard to get, so the men wear celluloid cuffs and collars and save time, trouble and annoyance. You would be surprised if I told you some of the high-toned men about town who wear them. They don't disguise the fact, and swear they have gone back on linen collars and cuffs forever. Celluloid goods always appear laundered, and never melt down in hot weather. The big celluloid cuff and collar trade begins in the summer months. Youths going to Coney island with their sweethearts want them and old men too. They are becoming so popular that I predict that within ten years they will altogether supersede linen for collars and cuffs."—New York Mail and Ex-

Camphor as Guard Against Cholera. At a meeting of the Homeopathic Medical Society at the Ophthalmic Hospital, New York, four papers were read which were devoted to cholera. Drs. Lillienthal, Ball, Belcher and Hallock all spoke highly of camphor as a remedy, especially in the early stages of the disease. Instances were given in which extraordinary doses had been taken with excellent results. Dr. Lillienthal said that when an epidemic of cholera was raging in Europe on one occasion, 2,000 people, each of whom carried camphor in a bag suspended over the chest, escaped the disease, although exposed as much as others who died by the score. Dr. Schiey counseled the people to avoid excess in labor, food and drink, and exercise. He said that the drinking of brandy in the hope of avoiding diarrhea would be especially bad, but for a person accustomed to moderate drinking to stop entirely would be bad also.

It is rumored about town that one of our young men who lives not more than 13 or 10 miles from the depot, and whose father runs a cooper shop, and sister the laundry, was married on Sunday last to a young maiden of Worden Station, but as the v. m. denies the charge we will give no names.

The meetings that have been held to see what could be done towards a celebration here July 4th have been well attended and much enthusiasm manifested. Dr. Brown, G. D. Hamilton, E. D. Howell, W. M. Marr and D. H. Jones the committee appointed to solicit funds, last night reported $160 raised and were given one more week to raise what more they could. It is thought that an amount sufficient to guarantee a celebration had been raised and last night another meeting was held and the committees appointed to make arrangements for, and act on that day.
