HONORED DUFFIELD

THE PAST-COMMANDER PRE-SENTED WITH A MEDAL.

Department Commander C. L. Eaton Makes the Presentation on Behalf of the Michigan Dept. G. A. R.

Col. C. L. Eaton, of Paw Paw, department commander of Michigan G. A. R., was present at a meeting of the encampment committee in Detroit Wednesday. Col. H. M. Duffield, former commander, was also present. Col. Eaton started a little speech by saying that he had been about the state considerably of late, and everywhere had found the old veterans fully alive to the coming occasion and fully appreciative of the generos to, enterprise and loyalty of the city of Detroit. "You are simply going to be overwhelmed," he said. "I doubt if more than a very few realize the enormous crowd that will be in your city on the occasion." After a few happy remarks in this vein the commander drew from his pocket a handsome plush case about 3x6 inches, and in a very felicitous speech presented to Col. H. M. Duffield a past department commander's badge, which had been voted to him at Muskegon one year ago. The badge is surmounted by an eagle over crossed cannon, beneath which is a miniature major-general's epaulet, two ivory stars on a black enamel bar mounted in gold, an acorn pendant, and below a larger pendant in gold chains, a star flanked by two soldiers, all in gold. On the latter a black enamel circle contains the words "Grand Army of the Republic, 1861 -Veteran - 1866," and the inscription: "Presented from the Comrades of the Department of Michigan to their loved Past Department Commander." Col. Duffield attempted one of his usual jovial off-hand acknowledgments, but became visibly affected and sat down with the remark that "nothing on earth could buy it of him--it was priceless,"

AN ENGINEER'S ERROR CAUSES A SMASH-UP AT ELMIRA.

One Man Killed, Several Injured and a Freight Train Wrecked as a Result,

By a collision between a Northern Central freight and a Lehigh Valley passenger train in Elmira, N. Y., July 22, one man was killed and two others badly injured. The freight was crossing from its switch to the Erie tracks directly in front of the block tower at Pennsylvania avenue. The Lehigh, a local train, was entering the city, going in the same direction as the freight. For some inexplicable reason Engineer Houkins, of the Lehigh, ignored the signals and crashed into the center of the freight. The wreck was indescribable, the freight cars being smashed into kindling wood, the locomotive stripped and thrown down a bank, and the tracks torn up for a considerable distance. The locomotive was the Thomas Esmond, No. 238. and one of the best on the road. The engineer was James Hopkins, of Waverly, about 50 years of age. He remained at his post and was found buried under the wreck of the cab with his hand on the throttle. He must have been instantly killed. He has a wife and several children at Waverly. John Daniels, of Witkesbarre, baggageman, was severely injured, several ribs being broken. The Fireman was M. W. Tillman, of Waverly. He stood at the left of the cab as the trains struck and was thrown upon the top of the cab, going over with it. He was not seriously injured.

Her heart wrestled mightily with her temptation-Love, mighty, omnipotent love stepped in and hurled aside her phantom guardian and she replied simply :---

"Yes, Phillip; I love you! I cannot help it." She stopped, she could say no more, she was frightened at what she had already said.

"Oh, darling if you could only feel the joy you give my heart by those few words; the raptu: e which fills my soul; you would then understand the delicious depth of the love I bear you."

The girl seemed strangely quiet-but there was a tone of fierce passion in her voice as she replied in a strange undemonstrative sort of way:

"Phillip; but the other day I loved my soul® beyond all things this world contains -Now Phillip I love you better than my own soul-my life was dear to me; but you Phillip, are far more precious to me than life without you. Do I love you, Phillip?"

The man by her side was startled by the awful solemnity of the passion he had awakened in the breast of the woman at his side. He shivered as he listened to the even voice which told of a love that was almost more than human! The cold tones of Barbara Glendon but covered a burning passion that cousumed every other sentiment of heart and soul-with her it was all or nothing-it was idolatry!

Her impetuous heart made the man beside her an idol—nothing more or less1

He spoke: "Yes, Barbara, I know you love me, but not more deeply than I love you. Soon, darling, we shall be all in all to each other, in the meantime we must arrange our meetings, and in a little time, darling, we will leave this place for my own home, where we shall reign alone!

It was surprising that the keen mind of Barbara did not weigh the maudlin lovewords of this man; they weighed like feathers to gold in comparison to the profound utterances coined in her own heart ---but they were love-words, and the voice that spoke them was as sweet music to her passionate soul.

Suddenly the bell struck ninc-Barbara started-whom had been on the place for years, and even sent away Kate's maid, Madeline, who had grown up in her service.--He supplied the place of the latter with a person of his own selection, and with whom he seemed to be thoroughly acquainted.

She was about forty years of age, sour but obsequious, and constantiv watched over the outgoings and incomings of her beautiful Mistress; and, in fact, kept over her such stringent guard, that Kate finally applied to her guardian for the woman's discharge.

She was frightened at the answer she received. Dillon was sitting with his son, Walter, in the library, when she entered to make her complaints and pressed her request.

"You don't like Mrs. Markhani, eh," said the old man cynically.

"I do not, sir; and further than that. I do not wish her about me," replied the fair girl.

"Well, Miss, you will hereafter bear in mind that my wishes are to be consulted here and not yours. As your guardian, I will have whom I please here, and particularly will I have Mrs. Markham, a lady for whom I have a high respect. I desire you to further understand that I will hear no more complaints. See that my wishes are obeyed."

With these curt and insulting words the old tyrant turned away and resumed his conversation with his son, who stood leaning on the mantle quietly smoking a cigar.

Tears filled the eyes of poor Kate as she listened to the cruel words of her heartless guardian, but she only said:

"Things have sadly changed since my dear father died!" and passed from the room.

As she opened the door she ran full against Mrs. Markham, and she knew sht had been listening at the key-hole: that lady flushed hotly, though a smile of triumph gleamed in her eyes. Kate passed her with a look of contempt, and went immediately up to her room.

When the door closed behind her, Walter Dillon turned to his father and said :

"Don't you think my dear father that you are beginning your game a little too early. To my mind, in order to carry out our purpose, conciliation would be the better card to play."

"You are wrong there Walter, she is a girl of strong will and sound sense, and rare self-dependence, and that will must be broken. The work would be much easier were it not for the splendid reputation you have achieved. Here you are scarcely twenty-four, and you are known in society as a fast man-good God, that is not the worst-a roue and a gambler;

CHAPTER III.

A RETROGRADE MOVEMENT IN WHICH WE LEARN SOMETHING OF OUR HEROINE.

We go back a few months anterior to the events already recorded, and to a tovels and enterprising town a few miles miles distant from the community of spindles where the Corporation Boardinghouse of the buxom Mrs. Moriarty is located.

of this story, to conceal the names of certain locales, as many of our incidents have foundation in real life, and as a few of our characters are moving and "living facts;" but the beautiful suburb of Brookline, just outside the city, is too enchanting a place for literary disguise, and it is there the present exigencies of our story calls us.

Snuggled among the trees, and far back from the wide and shady lanes leading from the highway, is a stone mansion of great architectural beauty, a magnificent lawn of velvet green, divided at the farther end by a splendid gravel driveway, rolls smoothly down to a low stone wall which runs along the front of the grounds for more than two hundred yards. Beautiful elms line the walks, and in the rear of the mansion is a spacious and beautiful conservatory, the grounds about which are laid out with rare taste and excellence -the fragrance of almost every species of flowers, verbenas, heliotropes, pansies, geraniums, and blushing carnations nod a welcome to the morning winds, and give a simple beauty to the place impossible almost for our prosaic pen to describe .--Further back is a beautiful sheet of water with a boat-house on either bank, while a couple of gaily-painted boats float lightly at their moorings. Opulence and exquisite taste is indicated on every hand. The very stables on the grounds, beautiful enough for a private residence, speaks of great wealth and lavish expenditure.

In this luxurious home resided Mr. Peter Dillon, together with his son Walter, and his neice, Kate Dillon, a young lady of great beauty and mistress of all the accomplishments taught at the famous seminary of Madam Devenant, many of whose pupils were among the leading belles and most accomplished ladies of the land; for Madam had been a teacher of the social fine arts at Hazeldean for nearly a quarter of a century-it is enough then to say that Kate Dillon graduated at her Academy, to appreciate to the full, her accumulated graces and accomplishments.

The elder Dillon was about sixty years of age, and the legal appointed guardian of his neice Kate; and had taken up his handsome face of the young man was distorted by a black frown, and he was walking hurriedly up and down the room. He was quite a handsome fellow, this Walter Dillon; his complexion was very dark, he wore a heavy black monstache-across his forehead was a long red scar which he from the city of Boston, and about tifty had managed to capture in one of his frequent brawls-for he was of a hot and fiery temper-ho was well built and very muscular, and carried about him the very air of what his father called him "a fast We had determined in the original plan | man." One saw it in the big diamond on his shirt front, the rings on his fingers, the long gold chain which hung from his neck over his dark velvet vest, in the marks of dissipation which, though they could be hardly pointed out, still seemed apparent in all about him.

Suddenly he paused in his walk-"I tell you what it is father, something must be done, and that soon to get on this marriage. From what you tell me, we have no means of our own, and I may as well be plain with you; I must have five thousand dollars, there is no need to argue that point," for his father seemed about to interrupt him, "if I don't get it immediately then I must do the next best thing, and you know what that is. The Standard Oil Co. is not satisfied with controlling the trade in this country but is extending its trade by gaining the control of the German trade also. The company transports its oil in tank steamers, and transfers it to barrels from the steamer, thus evading the German duty on barrels. The German press are bitter against the monopoly, but the government is not likely to oppress the people by raising the duty high enough to shut out American oil.

Our Wool Market.

There are circumstances which prevent the wool grower from getting as much for his wool as he ought to have as a general thing. But it is a fact even in the face of such circumstances that he must make his own market. That is to say, if he gets the best price that the market offers, he must have something that is worth the best price. Everything tells upon its merits in the long run. For a time fashion may influence the market and poor goods with a good reput-putation may for awhile sell for more than they are worth, but more than they are worth, but sooner or later such things must come down to merit. Reputation does no good much longer than the reputation is sustained. If that is permitted to suffer, past reputation will not keep a product up. The wool buyer may not offer for good wool what inferior wool is worth, but he will offer much less if it is not good wool. It is a man's own fault if he does not get vance in popular intelligence has been devoted to studying the wickedness and evil rather than the good in the world. Most newspapers devote too large a part of their space to criminal records, giving to the superficial observer the idea that wrong doing is enormously increasing, when the fact is that it is only more fully reported than formerly. A pleasant change would be to have the better class of newspapers devote more space to the record of what is being done to help human kind. This is no less news than the record of evil, and is vastly more edifying.

THE ART OF LIVING.

The Great Von Moltke's Rigorous Physical Discipline.

No wonder Von Moltke lived to such great age: Early in life he decided that he could produce better results by retiring at 10 o'clock and rising at 5, and for fifty-five years he followed out this programme. He would leave an important council, a great state dinner or any other function of importance at 9:30, so as not time he developed a particular fond- break the mold. ness for fruit. He partook of it freely for a year or so, and then one day he fancied that he was feeling some ill effects of over-indulgence. Thereupon he experimented upon himself, and concluded that fruit was not good for follies or their sorrows. him, and he never touched it again. He never knew what it was to go to his diet, his hours of sleep and his hours of work with the same intelligent discipline that he displayed in the organization of the army.
