F. E. Wright started a branch meat market at Gregory this week. F. J. Wright and O. Tupper will manage it.

A couple of Howell papers are talking back at one another and have been for some time. Come boys you had better make up.

A band of gypsies visited Dexter last week. They were not headed this way, however we can look for them some time next month.

The Sunday schools of Marion will hold a S. S. convention at the M. E. church in that township on Sunday next at 2 o'clock p. m.

As one of the bondsmen of Turner & Eggleston's saloon moved out of the village a short time ago, we understand that the saloon "was closed last week.

Some wheat in this vicinity is being plowed up and sown to oats. Some wheat wintered badly and oats will pay much better at the corresponding prices.

A mad dog passed through Williamston one day last week biting every dog it met. If one were to pass through here he would get tired of biting.

If the census bureau is correct there are 5,000,000 people in the United States over 15 years of age who cannot write, and this in the land of free schools too.

Livingston county agricultural society will plant trees on their grounds at Howell on Friday, arbor day. A good plan to improve the grounds. All members are requested to meet and help.

The firm of Allen and Reeve, publishers of the Dexter Leader, has been dissolved and J. M. Allen will conduct the business alone in the future. Mr. Allen has been proprietor for a good many years so the business is not new to him.

The new warden of the State's prison, Chamberlain, informs the convicts that they will be dealt with kindly but that the rules of the prison will be rigidly enforced and must be lived up to. No more midnight lunches and banquets for the convicts.

The administrators of the Weimeister estate rendered their final account to Judge Edgar Monday. They now have cash on hand to the amount of $17,917.17 net, with all expenses paid and a piece of Detroit property which has not yet been sold. On the face of this showing, the creditors will get 15c or a little better on the dollar. Brighton Argus.

Jas. Lyman of Dexter, was in town on Tuesday last.

W. W. Barnard and wife spent Sunday in Howell.

Miss Emma Reason entertained Brighton friends over Sunday.

The grand stand on the Pontiac fair ground was blown down last week.

Mrs. Melvin Burgess of Hartland, visited her parents, Wm. H. Placeway and wife, the past week.

Over $3,000 were paid out to farmers of this county by the Howell milk factory at their last pay-day.

W. B. Lester who has been confined to the house for the past six or seven weeks, is so as to be out again.

Frank Rathburn of Fowlerville, has a machine for raising barn frames and makes a business of that kind of work.

Will Hicks and wife are spending a few weeks in Ovid. A Mr. Clark is doing the work at the station during their absence.

The regular service of the K. O. T. M. is to-morrow (Friday) night. It is desired that there be a good number out as there is business to be done.

In Marion, Osceola Co. farmers are talking of going into the peppermint industry. It is thought it will pay much better than general farming.

Howell was struck on Monday last by 17 people from this place. It is too bad that the boys cannot go to the county seat after their licenses without the citizens all following.

The Howell citizens lecture course has closed and the treasurer has made a report and the society has just 33 ct. in the treasury. The total receipts were $943.33 and the total expenditure were $943. This is not a money making scheme and is not intended to be.

A. E. Harrington of Fenton, was in town part of last week giving lessons in shorthand. Mr. Harrington has a good system and teaches it in a very short time. We understand that Roy Teeple has secured the control of the system in this county. Those having a desire to learn stenography will do well to see him.

The Free Press says that John Bell its late managing editor, was years ago a galley boy in its office, but that he became the head of a great modern newspaper, than which no position is more lofty or honorable. The door stands ajar to many a place of eminence, and the young man has but to walk in if he will.—Pontiac Gazette.

The trouble now-a-day is that where the young man walks in the proprietor might as well walk out.

Robt. Hayward of Eaton Rapids, has the ballot box used at the first election in the township of Aurelius, this county, the date of which was April 21, 1838. The box is a small affair with hinge cover and each time a vote was cast the cover was lifted and the ballot cast therein. The election was held at his father's house and seven votes were cast, every man being elected to an office and some of them to two offices.—Williamston Enterprise.

The following are the supervisors for this county. Politically they will stand 8 republicans, 7 democrats and 1 populist:

Edward Sheridan and wife spent Sunday with Mrs. S. K. Hause, and a number of other friends of her's from Hamburg.

Rev. John Humphreys preached in the Cong'l church in Dexter on Sunday last. His pulpit was filled here in the morning by Rev. Thos. Holmes of Chelsea, and in the evening by V. D. Bozovsky of Bulgaria.

How many are there who ever stop to think of the work required to write the locals for a good local paper? Week after week, year after year, the paper goes out and chronicles the marriages, death, visits, socials, business news, crops, etc. etc. Just try and write to a friend all the news found in your home paper, once a week. You think it would be a pleasure but you would soon become tired of it, your letters grow shorter and shorter, and farther apart and finally quit altogether. With a newspaper writer it is different. It is a business of itself and is recognized as such by people who live in a lively town, and they will take pleasure in giving the news-gatherer items of general interest, and will not get mad either, if the items does not appear just as it was written. We have several in our village who realize the value of the Dispatch as a "letter" and send it to their friends instead of writing themselves. If this was done more by those who have absent friends, it would tend to make the home paper better. Try it.

Lecture on Bulgaria.

On Sunday evening last the people in this place and vicinity had the pleasure of listening for over an hour and a quarter to V. D. Bozovsky, of Bulgaria, as he delivered his lecture, "The Greek church, Manners and Customs in Bulgaria."

Mr. Bozovsky is a Junior student in the medical department of the U. of M., having come to this country, a distance of 6,000 miles to study medicine and fit himself for missionary work in his own country, to which he expects to return next year after graduation.

The lecturer was dressed in the costume of the rural districts of Bulgaria and gave the meaning of each part of dress. Although the house was crowded and he spoke for nearly an hour and a half the audience was intensely interested and could have stayed another hour without becoming weary. He speaks in a rich brogue but he has mastered the English language amazingly well for the short time he has been in this country. He went back to the third century in the history of the country and gave a summary of events that transpired during the years and centuries until the present time dwelling mostly upon the manners and customs that are in use at present in Bulgaria.

The school system is good, as children from the age of 7 to 15 are compelled to attend school. What is most needed is christian training and for this purpose he came to this country to study medicine knowing that as a physician he could reach the people as a clergeman could not. The government of the country is much like a republic having "houses" and a cabinet.

Altogether the lecture was instructive as well as interesting and any society will do well to secure Mr. Bozovsky for an evening.

Those who did not hear the lecture last Sunday evening missed a treat. Mr. Bozovsky is not a great orator but a very pleasing speaker and one does not tire in hearing him.

Fire Protection Again.

We again feel that we must urge upon our citizens the question of fire protection. We have a fine village, beautifully located, well built etc., and it is a shame that it does not possess some effectual means of defense against fire.

Should providence send a wind storm and level our village to the ground, we could not help ourselves nor is there any way of guarding against such an element. But if an incendiary should put a torch to one of our business places some of these windy nights, we would have to stand by and see our earthly possessions go up in flame and smoke, and know that we were in a measure to blame as we could have had some means of protection but would not.

The plea by many is "it will cost too much." Now see here, just be reasonable. Which is better; to purchase an apparatus at a cost of $1,000 or $1,200, or have a fire that will destroy $10,000 or perhaps $40,000 worth of property in a few hours?

A light tax for a few years would give us an equipment that would be very effectual. As it is, we have neither pails, buckets, ladders, axes, or in fact anything with which to fight fire. If we can have no hand engine we should at least have a truck with ladders, buckets, etc., and several large cisterns that could be filled from buildings. Citizens, shall we not do something in this matter? or shall we wait until the devouring element again sweeps through our village?

I KNOW NOT WHY.

Like a blind spinner in the sun,
I tread my days;
I know that all the threads will run
Appointed ways;
I know each day will bring its task,
And, being blind, no more I ask.
I know not why, but I am sure
That fate and place
In some great fabric to endure
Past time and race
My threads will have, so from the first,
Though blind, I never felt a curse.

Love in Lodgings.

BY ELORENCE WARDEN.

"Well," said Temple, reproachfully, "we know they came down in the same train with us. I saw them on the platform at Victoria, and again down here."
"What if you did? You only danced with her one night at a ball. You can't call that much of an acquaintance, since you don't even know her father. She's forgotten all about you by this time. Those very pretty girls always do. You should dance with plain ones if you want to be remembered."

Poor Temple winced, and slowly made his way out of the kitchen. He stumbled over the steps to the back door, and after peeping round the side of the house to see that no carriage was in sight and that nobody was looking out of the neighbors' windows, he darted out, and dragged in the nearest portmanteau as recklessly as if he had been a custom house officer. This manoeuvre he repeated until he got all the luggage into the house by the back way, and then, warm and breathless, he sat down on his own portmanteau to bemoan his own fate.

Hildred ran up stairs and tumbled over him while he sat still with his head in his hands.

"Can't you look where you are going?" What's the matter with you?" said he crossly.

But Hildred was breathless.

"That 'Cub' was all he could ejaculate as he rushed out."

Temple followed and became witness to a tragic scene. Just inside the front garden gate stood Harry, looking downcast and ashamed of himself, with a huge newspaper parcel in one hand and in the other a bass basket, the contents of which were something furry and alive. Hildred, forgetting his dignity, seized his young brother by the shoulder and tried to drag him along. The boy shook himself free, and looked up with a flushed and sullen face.

"You leave me alone," he said with ominous sulkingness. "I'm coming in, and I haven't done anything that I'm ashamed of."

He marched in with his parcel and his basket, and went down into the kitchen, followed by Hildred and Temple.

"There's your bread," he said, putting on the table the newspaper parcel, the covering of which fell loose and disclosed a quarter loaf.

"Well, and the rest of the things?" asked Cameron, with an angry frown gathering on his face.

"I—I, well, you see I haven't brought them. I borrowed your money, Hildred—I'll pay you back, honor bright, as soon as I get my next pocket money—to buy these rabbits."

Hildred interrupted him with what was almost a yell.

"Where's my change?"
"There's no change. I spent it all. The man let me have them very cheap, because it was all the money I—"

"You must lend us some more, that's all, Hildred," put in Temple hastily, afraid of the impending "awful row."
"I can't," answered Hildred in a hollow voice. "That half-sovereign was all I had!"

CHAPTER III.

A Desperate Resource.

"What!" moaned Temple, as Hildred's confession exposed the fact that their capitalist was only a man of straw after all.

"I'm so awfully sorry," exclaimed the comtrite "Cub," whose pretty face was peony-red with mortification. "I—I meant to get everything, just as you said, and to bring you back the change, of course. And I did get the bread, you know; but then—it was next to a green-grocer's, and he had two cages, one of rabbits, and the other of guinea-pigs; and they were such little beauties; look there!"

And the unhappy lad, hoping and almost believing that the sight of his treasures would be enough to soften even the hearts of hungry brothers, pulled out of his pockets and placed on the kitchen-table half-a-dozen tiny balls of fluff, whose squealing had already betrayed their presence.

"And the rabbits—you never saw such a pair, lop-eared and—"

"Very well," struck in Cameron, hoarse and white with anger, but speaking very quietly. "I daresay lop-eared rabbits are as good eating as others. And as for guinea-pigs, well, if they are small, they'll be tender, and we may have the honor of introducing to the world a new dish." And he seized two or three of the little animals, which Harry was protecting from the dangers of the table-edge with outstretched arms.

"What are you going to do with them?" asked the boy, alarmed.

"Wring their necks first, then cook them, and then eat them," replied Cameron, promptly. "You don't suppose we're going without our dinner just because you choose not to bring in the dinner we ordered? Temple, bring me those rabbits!"

The lop-eared beauties, having been released from the bass-basket, had already found their way as far as the wash-house.

"Temple, leave those rabbits alone."

The boy was shaking with passion; he was not a bit master of himself, but there was a note in his sweet voice which his brothers had never heard before. Cameron laughed in his face, and throwing two of the guinea-pigs into a pail which stood on the floor in a corner, he was on the point of wringing the neck of the third when something large and hard and knobby struck his head with a force which made him stagger, and caused him to drop the little squealing animal. It was the quarter loaf, which bounded from his head to the window and fell through into the area amid a crash of broken glass.

"Did you throw that?" inquired Cameron in a voice of thunder, as he glared at his youngest brother.

"Yes, I did," shouted Harry, who was dancing with rage. "You're a cur, that's what you are, to hurt my animals just because you're angry with me. I'll show you whether I'm such a mug as you think."

"Very well, my young friend. Then you'll just come into the wash-house with me and see me kill your precious rabbits, and then I'll give you such a dressing as you never had in your life."

Cameron seized his brother's arm and, having taken the latter by surprise, had dragged him through the doorway before Harry, with the agility of a cat, freed himself from his grasp and squared up at him.

"Come on!" cried Harry.

And without waiting for the invitation to be accepted or rejected, he made a lunge at his brother, and the next moment a regular fight began.

Now Cameron, though not more than the middle height, was thick set and sturdy, while Harry, though nearly a head taller than his brother, looked only a sort of half-grown fledgeling, all legs and wings. The issue of the contest seemed only too certain to Temple, who stood in the doorway to see fair play, resolved to interfere in time to save the plucky young "Cub" from being reduced absolutely to pulp. Hildred, with a shrug and an affected shudder, had withdrawn into the dim recesses of the kitchen, away from the scene of vulgar bloodshed, and was collecting guinea-pigs. He, too, expected a speedy end to his youngest brother.

When, however, the sounds of scuffling had continued for some minutes, curiosity lured him also to the wash-house door, where he soon became as much excited as Temple himself over the contest. For Harry was getting the best of it.

The fact was that the mild-eyed and sweet-voiced "Cub" had been having a fight a day and sometimes two for the last three months at Eaton. So that, although Temple deplored an absence of "style" in his method, he was so nimble and so savagely in earnest that his sturdier brother soon began to feel that he had had enough of it. He did not give in, however, until Harry, with a tremendous drive at his chest, laid him flat on the wash-house floor.

In a shame faced manner Harry then came forward and helped his beaten brother to rise. Cameron, battered, worn and with a black eye, held out his hand with a nod.

"You're not the mug I took you for," he said simply.

"That's all right," rejoined Harry as sweetly as ever.

A minute later the "Cub" was in the back garden, with all his rescued pets, crying as if his heart would break because Cameron, when he threw down the guinea-pigs in his passion had killed one of them.

There remained still the question of dinner. Cameron, whose face had been bathed, and who was in a subdued and rather melancholy mood, was hungrier than ever. Hildred brought in the quarter loaf, but for some reason or other none of them now liked the look of it. Cameron thoughtfully drew out his watch; but at the sight of it his brothers instinctively shook their heads.

"To every purchaser of our double illustrated Christmas number with colored plate we give a Gold Watch," said Temple softly.

"Well, let's see yours," retorted Cameron.

But his brother made excuses. He had left it behind him. It was out of repair. So he had forgotten it.

"You haven't forgotten the chain, though," remarked Cameron.

With a self-conscious laugh his brother took off the little chain and laid it on the table, revealing the fact that there was a watch at the end, not quite in keeping with it as to quality.

"Waterbury!" said Hildred.

"And one of the sit-up-all-night-to-winders," added Cameron.

"Well, and haven't you a watch?" asked Temple, turning hastily to Hildred. "Living at home as you do, a life of refined simplicity, surely you haven't?"

"Why, yes, I have," interrupted Hildred hastily. "With you fellows continually writing for supplies, there isn't much left for me. I'm supposed to have everything I want in the world, just because I live at home, so I'm worse off than anybody."

The case was a serious one, but at last Cameron threw up his head with a gleam of hope in his face.

"Well!" said Temple. "Got an idea?"

But his brother would not own the soft impeachment. He glanced from Hildred to Temple, and back again from Temple to Hildred.

"Bring in Harry," he then said briefly.

Hildred obeyed and brought in the boy, rough-haired, shame-faced, his eyes red and swollen, still cuddling one lop-eared rabbit, who evidently did not return his affection.

"My lords and gentlemen," began Cameron, impressively. "We are in an awful mess. I don't believe I, for one, was ever in such a mess before, and I've been in a good many. I can tell you. Now there's only one way to get out, and that is by all sticking together, and by nobody minding what he does as long as it's for the general good. Gentlemen, we have your adhesion and support in this?"

"Well, but I say—what do you want us to do, you know?" said Temple, deprecatingly.

"If anybody is going to make a confounded fool of himself by starting objections, he can go outside," said Cameron, dropping his dignity and staring at his elder brother with an expression of face to which his black eye gave a pathetic ferocity.

"Shut up, Temple," cried Harry, whom victory had made bold.

"I think there can be no serious difference of opinion as to the absolute necessity for the course you propose, Cameron," remarked Hildred sententiously. "And I, for one, am quite ready to avail myself of your suggestions, as I feel that you are the person best qualified to deal with the difficulties of the situation."

"Me, too," chimed in Harry. "I'll do whatever you like."

Temple then, reluctantly and with suspicion, acquiesced in the arrangement. But at the very first suggestion which Cameron made, he jumped up and objected again. For his brother proposed that they should all give what they could spare, and that Temple should be the person to take the collection so made to the nearest pawnbroker's. This Temple flatly refused to do. If Cameron liked to do that sort of thing, he could go, he said. For himself, he would rather starve than—

"No kicking!" broke in Harry.

To everybody's surprise, the statesmanly Hildred volunteered to go in place of Temple. But Cameron gave him a series of exaggerated winks to persuade him to send his high-emulation Temple as a length half-crown, half-buffed in, undertaking the distasteful errand. Rather pitifully distressed, Harry offered to go with him, and as no objection was raised to this, the pair started together in charge of an assortment of portable property consisting of Temple's chain, a silver match-box of Cameron's, and a gold bangle, which Hildred sacrificed with much reluctance. Harry had nothing to offer but a silver pencil-case with the top gone, and a defective pocket compass, both which contributions had to be courteously declined.

The two ambassadors were gone nearly two hours. For poor Temple, haunted by fear of being seen by Linda Feere and her father on the threshold of the accursed place, lingered about until Harry persuaded him that if they waited until it was dark all the shops would be closed. When they had at last fulfilled their humiliating errand, prompted thereto by the fact that the ever-hungry schoolboy was on the verge of starvation, while even Temple began to feel other pangs than those of hopeless love, they turned toward "Seaview." Harry went into a baker's shop, bought a fresh loaf, then fell a victim to the temptation of jam puffs, and came out grim-smiling with shame.

"Twopence short," he said recklessly, as he handed the rest of the change to his brother.

But Temple only nodded good-humoredly.

So they sauntered up to "Seaview" on the best of terms. Temple still babbling tranquilly of his love, ignorant of the crushing blow which was in store for him.

"And so," he was saying, as he placed his hand upon the gate, "our grandfather's money is not to come to us after all. I suppose I shall have to leave the army and go into some beastly office." And in any case, whether I do or don't, I shall never be able to think of her, for she is the handsomest girl out, and her father is as proud as Lucifer, and—"

The New Bread.

The favor with which the new bread made with Royal Baking Powder instead of yeast, has been received by our best housekeepers and most expert bread makers is really wonderful. "It saves all the hard and tedious work of kneading and moulding," writes one. "Less than an hour from the dry flour to the most perfect loaf of bread I ever saw," writes another. "Fresh bread every day," says another, "and that the lightest, finest and most wholesome, is something to live for." "We relish the bread better than the old kind." "It is ahead of any yeast bread I ever baked." "The bread was whiter and softer." "Best of all," writes an enthusiastic housewife, "we can eat the Royal unfermented bread when freshly baked, or even when warm, with perfect impunity. It is actually an anti-dyspeptic."

"This bread has a 'nutty' taste that is peculiarly pleasing," writes still another. This is owing to the fact that the active gas-producing principle of the Royal is derived from the pure grape-acid.

The great value of this bread arises from the fact that in it are preserved all the most nutritive elements of the flour, some of which are decomposed and destroyed by the action of yeast. The loss of these properties is what makes fresh yeast bread unwholesome. The use of the Royal Baking Powder instead of yeast is found to make a finer, lighter bread, devoid of all dyspeptic qualities. The same gas—carbonic—is produced as where yeast is used, but it is evolved from the baking powder itself and not from the flour. Thereby the bread is made more wholesome and actually anti-dyspeptic. The greater convenience, where a batch of the finest bread can be made and baked in less than an hour with no danger of a sour or heavy loaf, must be appreciated by every one.

The receipt for making this bread is herewith given, and housekeepers will do well to cut it out and preserve it:

To make one loaf: One quart flour, one teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful sugar, two heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder, half medium-sized cold boiled potato, and water. Sift together thoroughly flour, salt, sugar and baking powder; rub in the potato, add sufficient water to mix smoothly and rapidly into a stiff batter, about as soft as for pound-cake; about a pint of water to a quart of flour will be required—more or less according to the brand and quality of the flour used. Do not make a stiff dough, like yeast bread. Pour the batter into a greased pan, 4½x8 inches, and 4 inches deep, filling about half full. The loaf will rise to fill the pan when baked. Bake in very hot oven 45 minutes, placing paper over first 15 minutes baking, to prevent crusting too soon on top. Bake at once. Don't mix with milk.

Perfect success requires the most careful observance of all these details, and the author of the receipt emphasizes the statement that Royal Baking Powder only can be used because it is the only powder in which the ingredients are prepared so as to give that continuous action necessary to raise the larger bread loaf.

To every reader who will write the result of her bread making from this receipt to the Royal Baking Powder Co., 106 Wall street, New York, that company announce that they will send in return, free, a copy of a most practical and useful cook-book, containing one thousand receipts for all kinds of baking, cooking, etc. Mention this paper.

LOUIS XIV.

Some Anecdotes Told of the Boyhood of a Stately King.

Little Louis was just four years and eight months old when, by the death of his father, he became king of France. He received his courtiers gracefully on the first occasion when they presented themselves before him; and when he and his mother stepped out on the balcony to show themselves to the people who swarmed below, he was greeted with shouts of "Vive le Roi!" from the populace. Thus began his long reign over France. Immediately after assuming his royal duties, he presided at a council. Lifted into the chair of state, he sat there demurely while the council deliberated, and then signed his first public document—his mother, Anne of Austria, holding his little hand, and guiding the pen.

The next morning he was taken to Paris, says St. Nicholas. His whole journey was a triumphal progress. The people never tired of looking at and praising the lovely child, who sat on his mother's knee and gazed at them with earnest baby eyes. It was on the occasion of meeting his parliament next day that, for at least once in his stately life, Louis XIV. acted like a child. He was sitting upon his throne in the hall of Saint Louis, the queen regent on his right hand, the court all around, while in front sat the parliament, composed of grave, dignified men, awaiting his orders. The queen stood him upon his feet, and whispered in his ear. The king laughed, blushed, turned around, and hid his little face in the cushions of his seat. Never had parliament been more quaintly received! But Anne of Austria was strict in etiquette. Again she took his hand, again spoke softly in his ear. Gracefully he stepped forward and said, "Gentlemen, I am come to assure you of my affection; my chancellor will inform you of my will."

The little king was too young of course, to understand much that went on around him. He spent the greater part of every day in the company of his mother. A small band of children, formed into an military company and called les enfants d'honneur (children of honor), helped to amuse his majesty. He drilled them severely, marching them up and down the long gallery of the Louvre to the sound of a big drum, which had been given him and which he delighted to beat. Whenever the queen appeared these youngsters presented arms with much dignity.

When Louis was seven years old—that is to say, in the year 1645—he danced at the wedding of his cousin, Marie de Nevers, who married the king of Poland. Dancing was a fine art at this time, and one in which persons of high rank were expected to excel. Anne of Austria was an exquisite dancer, and had caused her son to be carefully trained in this graceful accomplishment. Young as he was, he could bow with surprising distinction, and wield his hat skillfully in the mazes of the minuet.

OLD OAKS.

The Patriarchs of the Forest as Seen at Waverly.

The great oaks at Waverly, Mass., are survivals of an oak forest that must have existed in that region, according to geologists and students of trees, as far back as the tenth century. They bear every evidence of great age, and an elm tree in the neighborhood, with its great limbs lying on the ground and nearly all of its branches decayed, is the most venerable object in the line of trees that can probably be displayed in any part of New England. It is well worth a visit to Waverly just to see this venerable elm.

It is immense in the size of its trunk, and its dignity in decay is very impressive. The dozen oak trees in the neighborhood are of the sort that attain a very great age, and that maintain their virility unimpaired. We know of only one other oak tree in New England that can be compared with them. That is located at Ipswich, and is larger and more venerable, apparently, than any of the Waverly oaks, and that and the Waverly oaks, we are glad to know, have been inspected by the state park commissioners, and are likely to be preserved.

It is worth one's while to see and study these majestic oaks. They are seen to great advantage in the winter, when the rugged limbs are bare and their immense strength is revealed, and in summer when they are covered with foliage, they are objects of wonderful beauty. The state of Massachusetts has a duty to enfranchise these trees and make them public property. They are the glory of the state, and almost as much an object of interest as the old-state house or the venerable structure called the Old South Meeting-house.

The Detective Who Never Detected.

The detective is telling a story. "I saw him coming," he said, "and I braced myself against a lamp post and caught my breath—" "Did what?" asked the captain. "Caught my breath." "Not in a thousand years. You never caught anything." —Buffalo Express.

There is some surprise among other countries at the sudden assumption of the first place by the United States as an iron producing country. Last year Great Britain produced a million tons less than in 1880, while the productions of the United States last year was more than five million tons in excess of 1880. Last year the United States produced two and a half million tons more than Great Britain.—Toledo Blade.

There is a large and growing demand for cancelled postage stamps—those of the larger denominations actually bringing a good price. The principal collectors of cancelled stamps are Italians and it is believed by authorities that chemicals are used to clean them and then they are sold or passed as new stamps. It is thought that certain people are making a regular business of this kind. It is easy to see how the business might become profitable if it is not interfered with by the government.

A new York despatch says that Ballington Bothe, the commander of the salvation army in this country, has decided to adopt his father's "Darkest England" scheme here. He has already received several offers of land for the first farm he wishes to establish, but has not yet made his selection for this proposed colony, as the land offered is in the west. What he wants first is a farm near New York city, because his first colony will be made up of those rescued there. The probabilities are that this farm will be in New Jersey. The plan for his scheme is to establish a shelter in all large cities, where he will temporarily receive and care for, as best he can, those who ask for assistance. All of those who are able and willing to do work on the farm will be sent to join the colony established on the farm nearest each city. There the process of reformation will be carried forward by industrial, normal and religious methods, with the hope that some day the fallen one may be restored to his friends.

It has been truly said by a talented correspondent of the London Times, that in the great Columbian exhibition, the city of Chicago will form the main exhibit. Never in the history of city building has there been such marvelous development. London and Paris were each a thousand years old before Chicago was dreamed of. At the time of the great fire, 1871, Chicago was a city of somewhat over 300,000. The great fire swept through the city, destroying the entire business portion and one-third of the resident portion, converting a busy city into a wilderness of ashes and ruin between two successive sun sets. Now, after twenty-one years, she is completely rebuilt with the largest aggregation of elaborate and costly buildings to be found in any part of the world, and has added over a million to her population during this time. It is especially fortunate, and many of our readers will be glad to know, that there is on exhibition on Michigan Ave., in the World's Fair city, a cyclorama of the great fire in which the scenes and incidents of that fearful calamity are faithfully, and in a most realistic manner, presented for public view.

From the central platform of this remarkable exhibition one may see a thousand acres of crumbling walls and red hot ruins; a thousand acres more a literal sea of fire, while tens of thousands of panic stricken people are fleeing for their lives. It is a scene of awful grandeur and indescribable confusion, and is said to be the most elaborate and expensive work of art ever produced. Let one stand within it and view the wreck, ruin and disaster about him; see what Chicago was twenty odd years ago, and then take a walk through the busy streets of the city to-day and he will have two pictures the like of which history furnishes no parallel.

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

Is superior to all other preparations claiming to be blood-purifiers. First of all, because the principal ingredient used in it is the extract of genuine Honduras sarsaparilla root, the variety richest in medicinal properties. Also, because the yellow dock, being raised expressly for the Company, is always fresh and of the very best kind. With equal discrimination and care, each of the other ingredients are selected and compounded. It is because it is always the same in appearance, flavor, and effect, and, being highly concentrated, only small doses are needed. It is, therefore, the most economical blood-purifier in existence. It makes food nourishing, work pleasant, sleep refreshing, and life enjoyable. It searches out all impurities in the system and expels them harmlessly by the natural channels. AYER'S Sarsaparilla gives elasticity to the step, and imparts to the aged and infirm, renewed health, strength, and vitality.

THE EEL FISHERMAN.

A Sketch of the Life and Habits of an Interesting Character.

A sketch of an ordinary day's duties will serve to illustrate the 200 or more of a season's fishing. The eel pots having been carefully moored buoyed and baited, the fisherman has to arise each morning at 2 o'clock and proceed to his shanty, where, after storing his cat-boat with spare pots, lines and fresh baiting he sets off to visit each locality, often quite a distance apart, where a pot is set. These are in turn drawn and the contents emptied into a skiff or caulk which he has towing astern, or the boat itself if she has a good well.

The pots are then rebaited, examined to see if they are in good condition, for it sometimes happens that the eels which have an unaccountable faculty of packing themselves in the pots overload one, which causes the laths of which it is mainly constructed to break. When this is the case, the pot has to be unmoored and one of the spare ones substituted. These varied employments engross the time of the fisherman usually some six or seven hours, and it is rarely before 8 a. m. that he again reaches home. After partaking of a somewhat hurried breakfast, eels enough having been secured for shipment, the process of skinning begins, which in the hands of an expert is really a scientific affair. They are then washed in salt water, and after being laid out for a short time for the water to drip off them are packed with ice in barrels; the head of the barrel is then covered with gunny cloth, upon which is fastened the

They are then, without delay, shipped to their destination in order that the ice may not have entirely melted before reaching it. The work ended, our friend, the eeler, takes a couple of hours' rest, when he is again to resume work, which constitutes the preparing of bait for the next day, and the repair and cleansing of pots with other odd jobs fully takes up his time till 4 or 7 in the evening, and by 9 p. m. he is glad to betake himself to bed, where he is rewarded for his labors by that child-like repose known to few men who are not engaged in physical toil.

Those among the fishermen who have made eel life a study assert that the eel, besides being particular to the verge of fastidiousness as to the freshness of its bait, demands a frequent change of the sort of bait used during the season. In the early spring menhaden appear to be most pleasing to its taste, but by the middle of May they tire of them and seem to have a craving for a species of sea tortoise known in the eeler's nomenclature as horse feet, though in some parts of the bay during the horse-foot season it prefers mussels, which prove to accord perfectly with its palate.

Though the work of the eel fisherman is much harder than that of other fishermen in the bay, his profits per pound are usually much larger, as he rarely gets less than nine cents not for each pound of eels, and as a barrel when packed for shipment contains from 100 to 150 pounds of fish and the shipments are from three to five barrels per week for some fifteen or twenty weeks, it can readily be seen that the man earns from $800 to $1,000 each season. This sum, with what he can pick up during the winter, will, in a quiet fishing village, give him an ample income for his simple wants, and if no ill luck befalls his boat or himself will leave a small amount to be put by for a rainy day.

HARD TO COUNTERFEIT.

The Paper Money of Europe—Why It Matters to the Counterfeiter. The paper money of the United States is the least handsome in the world," said the proprietor of a money exchange to a Washington Star man. "That is because this government depends entirely upon the intricacy and elaborateness of the designs on its notes and certificates for protection against counterfeiters. In foreign countries, on the other hand, much effort is directed to making their currency beautiful with pictures and arabesques in the classical style. Not only are the results pretty to look at, but they serve their chief purpose better for any engraver will tell you that real art work on a bill is far more difficult to imitate than any purely mechanical effect, no matter how complicated the latter may be made by the geometric lathe and other devices.

Most beautiful of all paper notes are those issued in France and Prussia. Here is a pretty Austrian bill for 100 florins printed in blue ink, with the design mainly composed of two large standing figures of cherub children and an oval of children's heads. That seems a queer notion from our point of view for the ornamentation of currency, but it is certainly both interesting and handsome. This is a Russian bill for 100 rubles done in pink and green. Here you have a Scotch note issued by the British Linen Company which promises to pay £5 on demand. In Great Britain the privilege of issuing paper money can be obtained by corporations other than banks from the government. You will need a magnifying glass to examine this note with. It is fresh. The words 'one pound' are printed across it in big letters, but this broad stripe extending from one end to the other of the document is a curiosity. To the naked eye even upon scrutiny, it seems to have no significance, but when magnified you will perceive that it is wholly made up of the words 'one pound' in microscopic letters. From the superficial appearance of the Bank of England notes you would suppose that they could be readily imitated by photography or otherwise, inasmuch as their designs consist of very little more than lettering in black that is almost severely simple. But that great financial institution depends altogether upon the water marking of its paper, which is wonderfully elaborate, as you can see by looking at the light through it. This water marking has been imitated, but never with success."

La Grippe.

During the prevalence of La Grippe the past seasons it was a noticeable fact that those who depended upon Dr. King's New Discovery, not only had a speedy recovery, but escaped all of the troublesome after effects of the malady. This remedy seems to have a peculiar power in effecting rapid cures, not only in cases of La Grippe, but in all diseases of Throat, Chest and Lungs, and has cured cases of Asthma and Hay Fever of long standing. Try it and be convinced. It won't disappoint. Free Trial Bottles at F. A. Sigler's Drug Store.

PINCENEY, MICHIGAN

THE story of a contemplated attempt to assassinate the prince of Wales is regarded as doubtful in some quarters. There is not the least excuse for any such mild and uncertain feeling as doubt. It is so surely and and plainly a fake, and rather a stupid one at that.

AN appropriation of $37,000 was made at the last session of congress to pay employees of the bureau of engraving and printing, but in the engraving the thousands were dropped and as signed by the president the bill appropriates only $37. So until congress meets again that appropriation comes to naught instead of to three of them.

THE hotel waiters of New York have organized, with a view to maintaining the right to wear their whiskers just as it pleases their fancy to do so. The requirement of shaving off their mustaches, which is now insisted on in all the leading hotels and restaurants there, is denounced as contrary to the laws which govern the free institutions of this country. The New York waiters appear to have taken courage from the experience of their Boston brethren on this whisker issue.

IN spite of the unanimous voice of history and science, of experience and theory, that the wasting of forests inevitably tends to undesirable climatic changes, to a decrease in the average rain-fall, to floods and drouths, and a hundred other evils, there are still intelligent and well-read men who insist that forests or the absence of forests have nothing to do with the case, just as equally intelligent men can be found who in spite of overwhelming evidence to the contrary persistently maintain that there is no virtue in the Jenner system of vaccination.

Mrs. MONTAGU, the aristocratic Englishwoman who punished her infant daughter for a trivial offense by hanging the latter up by the arms until she died, has completed her term of imprisonment and is again at liberty. During her incarceration she gave birth to another child, whom it is to be hoped she will treat as a mother should. Mrs. Montagu has gone to the continent for the alleged purpose of living until her crime is forgotten by society. She may be able to carry out this part of the programme, but if she has one spark of natural instinct in her bosom she will hardly be able to live anywhere long enough to forget it herself.

THE law of making macadam roads is to have fall the stones, which constitute the top dressing, small enough to pass through a two-inch ring, so that they will pack together and form one solid whole. How many macadam roadways are thus built in this country? The broken rock is left so large that a wagon in passing over them displaces them as it would a heap of bowlders. They roll and tumble about until they are ground into dust or mud, as the weather is dry or wet. Macadam roadways properly constructed, constructed as Mr. Macadam planned them, and properly cared for, ought to last a life time even where the hauling is heavy.

A WOMAN has a perfect right to change her mind and decline a man's attentions at any period of her acquaintance with him, and the man who will insist upon forcing himself upon a woman's society when he is no longer wanted is lacking in every element of decency, self-respect and ordinary shame. If he wishes to blow his own mushy brains out through disappointment that is his own business, and the world is not much the loser. But the man who would kill a woman because she refuses to marry him would strike or kick the same woman if she united her life with his. Murders of this class are becoming too frequent of late and they are caused by a low craving for revenge and a morbid desire for notoriety.

IT is evident that the proprietors of city hotels and restaurants pay low wages on the assumption that the guests will make up the difference with tips. In other words, it is the proprietors of such establishments and not the waiters who really profit by the charity. By their policy in this respect they have made it almost incumbent on every guest to pay a tip in addition to the charges printed on the bill of fare. The waiters expect it, and no one can get proper attention without it. Reform should be sought until it is accomplished on at least two points. The waiter should not be dependent on charity for adequate compensation, and the imposition of rendering it necessary for guests to pay a sum in addition to published charges—and very high charges at that—to secure proper service or even courteous treatment should be abolished.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

SOME REQUISITES IN TRANSPLANTING.

Rules for Subsequent Management—Caring for Honey—Bloody Milk—Horticultural Hints and Household Helps.

Requisites in Transplanting.

The requisites for successful transplanting are not always fully understood. This is proved by the fact that a portion of most newly set orchards died. There is no reason why a part should perish, and that every one in a thousand should not live and grow freely if the work were always equally well done. The following rules laid down by the Albany Cultivator may be of use to young orchardists:

1. First, prepare the ground—drain if too wet, enrich if too poor.
2. Let the soil be deeply and thoroughly mellowed.
3. Take up the tree with plenty of roots long enough to hold it erect without staking.
4. If the roots are bruised, pare off the bruised portions.
5. Shorten in the head enough to correspond with the loss in cutting the roots; always do this before the buds swell.
6. Spread the roots equally on all sides and fill in finely pulverized soil, leaving no crevices or cavities.
7. Plant no deeper than before taking up, but raise the earth an inch or two to allow for settling.
8. Mulch when danger of midsummer drought is feared.

As a necessary supplement to these rules, as well as for years afterwards, keep the ground clean and mellow for several feet at least around each tree.

A few additional rules for subsequent management should not be neglected.

9. Manure should never be placed in contact with the roots, but may be placed on the surface.
10. Allow for the length of the roots as great as the height of the tree and cultivate to a corresponding distance.
11. Never set young trees in a grass field, but always where the ground can be cultivated and made mellow.
12. If the roots chance to be frozen when out of the ground, they may be restored without injury if compactly buried in mellow soil before thawing.
13. Shrivelled trees may be made plump by compactly burying in mellow soil for several days. If thawed when exposed they will perish.
14. Watering a tree in dry weather only wets and crusts the surface. If a few inches of the top surface is removed before watering, it will last longer; but the best way of all is to keep the soil and top surface constantly mellow.
15. Where the soil cannot be cultivated, mulch the surface for several feet about the tree with rotten straw, coarse manure or other substance, to keep the ground constantly moist.
16. Mice may be prevented from gnawing the bark in winter by making a small, conical, smooth mound around each tree before the ground freezes.
17. As soon as a new orchard is set out, and before any names are lost, register them permanently in an account book. This will prevent wrong names in subsequent years.

Bloody Milk.

Blood may appear from one or more of the teats at the time of milking from various causes. Among these we may mention congestion, inflammation or internal lesion of the udder, sudden transition to abundant and succulent food, eating of acrid vegetation, injury from rough milking, the presence of polyypus tumors, etc. The milk is streaked with blood when it is drawn, and when allowed to stand in a vessel it falls to the bottom, where it may be seen as globules or clots. It will, of course, depend upon the cause what treatment to adopt. If due to the presence of injurious herbage, this should be avoided. If due to the presence of small polyypus tumors within or above the teats, these tumors should be removed. If due to unknown causes internal treatment may be resorted to, and the following remedies may be used: Take three drachms of powdered camphor, three ounces each of powdered ginger and powdered oak bark, and two ounces of rye flour, divide into six parts and give one part morning and night well shaken together, with a pint of water in a bottle.—Prairie Farmer.

Cause and Effect.

Said a young man to J. B. Terry the other day: "My father has 280 acres of land; I am the only son. I am twenty-four years old and have worked faithfully for father all my life. Sometime, thirty years from now, perhaps, I will doubtless have half of the land and sister the other half. But now I don't have anything. Father gives me a little money when I ask for it; but I don't have pay for my labor, not the half of what the hired man gets. Father won't hear to any move to start me for myself, unless I will get married and bring my wife into his house to save his keeping a hired girl, to state the plain truth. This I will never do (with flashing eyes). Father didn't do this way; I won't. But there is going to be a change before long. I haven't said much except to mother, but some day, before long, I will have a home of my own and be at work for myself." This is no fancy sketch. This young man's father is one of the leading men in a town I have lately visited, doing much for others, deeply interested in the institute, but forgetting his own son. Perhaps he doesn't realize how old the young man is getting. I promised this bright young friend to do what I could for him. Now to the father: My dear friend, you will make the worst mistake of your life if you let that young man go. He is your main dependence. But go he will, unless given a chance, as would any young man with any snap in him. You would have done the same yourself when of his age. "Then shall a man leave father and mother and cleave to his wife and his own home and individual interests," is a law you cannot change if you would.

Caring for Honey.

If one has surplus cases enough, the best way to care for the honey is to pile up the cases in a dry, warm room, says a writer in the Western Ploverman, never store it in a cool cellar. Pile the cases with sticks between, so the air can circulate through them. If the room is warm and dry enough, the honey in cells not capped over will thicken and no run out.

If a queen-excluding honey-board has been used, there will be little or no pollen in the sections, and little danger from the moth. To guard against them, however, it will be best to fumigate once with sulphur about two weeks after removal from the hives.

When ready for market the sections should be put in nice, new shipping cases, and should be sold only at fair, paying prices.

Horticultural Hints.

Deep plowing before planting is of more importance than the cultivation after planting out.

Old trees may be made fruitful by severe pruning, while young trees are often severely injured.

In nearly all cases it will be best to set young trees where the soil can be kept loose and mellow.

It is not by any means a safe plan to gauge the quality of the fruit trees altogether by their size.

The objection to training the trees too low is that it interferes considerably with the cultivation.

Cropping is injurious if no care is taken to return the fertility that the growing crops take away.

Whatever adds to the size, substance and color of the foliage gives size and quality to the fruit.

Pine cut into strips, and the name written on with a lead pencil makes the best labels for fruit trees.

By grafting any old fruit tree that is healthy but unproductive can be soon changed in its character.

One advantage in sowing buckwheat in the orchard is that it soon thoroughly shades the ground.

Flax thrives best on rich, deep, loamy soil and should be thoroughly prepared before sowing the seed.

Never allow manure to come in direct contact with the roots, apply in the surface and work into the soil.

Household Helps.

Ivory, when not stained, may be restored to its former whiteness by cleaning with powdered pumice stone and water, and then placing it under glasses in the sun's rays.

One of the first requisites of good carving is to have the meat dish of good size. It is almost impossible to handle a piece of meat acceptably upon a platter that is even a degree too small.

It is not generally known that currant or any fruit jelly may be easily removed from the mold by setting it in water as hot as your hand can bear it for a few minutes. The jelly looks much better when turned out in this way.

It is at the top that comfortables and quilts wear out and soil soonest. Prevent this by sewing at the top of these a strip of calico, doubled in the middle, half being on inside and half on outside of comfortable. This strip can easily be removed and washed when soiled.

Mattings should never be washed with anything but salt and water—a pint of salt to half a pailful of soft water moderately warm. Dry quickly with a soft cloth. Twice during the season will probably be sufficient washing for a bedroom, but a room much used will require it somewhat oftener.

Steel knives which are not in general use may be kept from rusting if they are dipped in a strong solution of soda—one part water to four of soda; then wipe them dry, roll in flannel, and keep them in a dry place; or the steel may be well covered with mutton tallow, then wrapped in paper and put away.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

"August Flower"

"I have been afflicted with biliousness and constipation for fifteen years and first one and then another preparation was suggested to me and tried, but to no purpose. A friend recommended August Flower and words cannot describe the admiration in which I hold it. It has given me a new lease of life, which before was a burden. Its good qualities and wonderful merits should be made known to everyone suffering with dyspepsia and biliousness." Jesse Barker, Printer, Humboldt, Kas.

FASTEST THAT SAILS.

The U. S. Cruiser Detroit Makes the Highest Record for Her Class.

The new cruiser Detroit is a grand success. During her final run on Long Island Sound she developed an average speed of 18 4/10 knots an hour. To this the additions and deductions in consequence of the tide will be made by the naval officers, and it is safe to say that a speed of 19 knots was maintained. Having made this record, the Detroit bears the distinction of the fastest of her class in the world. Contracted for to develop 17 knots an hour and having developed 19 knots, the Columbian Iron Works & Dry Dock company, of Baltimore, the builders, will receive a premium of $200,000.

At 11:45:18 o'clock the starting point was reached. The steam gauges showed a pressure of 163 pounds on the boilers, and the Detroit crossed the line with Capt. Thomas at the helm. The course as laid down by the navy department instructions was from a point two and fifty-five hundredths nautical miles south of Stratford shoal lighthouse to the intersection of the Saybrook range with line joining Faulkner Island and Plum Island lighthouses. The course is 35 9/10 nautical miles long, and the entire run of 71 9/10 miles was made in three hours 54 minutes and 48 seconds. The time allowed by the government was four hours, therefore when the finishing point was reached the Detroit had six minutes and twelve seconds to spare, greatly to her credit. During the run the average run of a mile was three minutes and 21 seconds. The fastest mile was made in three minutes and four seconds, which was the first mile run after the Detroit was turned off Stratford shoal.

The personnel of the cruiser will consist of 22 officers, 30 firemen, 25 marines and 185 sailors, making a total of 292 men. The rig of the vessel is that of a two-masted schooner, having a yard on the foremast, the spread of canvas being about 6,300 square feet. The boat outfit will be one steam cutter, one sailing launch, one whale boat, two cutters, one gig and two dinghies. The working boats will be carried on skid beams over the quarterdeck, for the handling of which two derricks are fitted. The steering apparatus will consist of a steam steering engine, which is located underneath the watertight deck, immediately abaft of the engine room, and is arranged to be worked by hand as well as by steam, and is connected with the pilot house and conning tower.

Carter Talks Seals Intelligently. In resuming his argument before the tribunal of arbitration Mr. Carter, United States counsel, claimed that the seals were not feræ naturæ, but private property when nourished and tended by man. The seals frequenting the Prebyloff islands were, Mr. Carter contended, guarded and cherished by the United States and therefore a species of husbandry was formed, giving a property right in the seals. Continuing, Mr. Carter said that Great Britain claimed the right to prey upon animals whose very existence today was due to the efforts of the United States. The extermination of seal life in Behring sea had been prevented by the United States, and this action of the United States was worthy of the recognition of humanity, who still benefited from the seal industry.

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW. NEW YORK, April 17.-R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: The ruling fact in the business situation is the outflow of gold, $4,000,000 last week with the prospect of a large amount this week. Treasury gold is again reduced below $2,000,000 in excess of the million fund and there is more talk of bond issues. With the old doubt whether these would meet the real difficulty, which is the enormous excess of imports over exports of goods. In speculative markets cotton is a quarter lower. The pressure of enormous stocks here and abroad being felt as should have been expected, while reports of increased acreage come from the south. In wheat the Chicago corner forced May above 94c, while 7c would buy at New York, and receipts at western ports were nearly 2,000,000 bu in four days. Prices have advanced only 1/2c, while corn declined 1/2c and oats advanced 1/2c. Pork products are a shade stronger and also oil, but coffee weaker. At nearly all points, both north and south, collections are rather slow with somewhat more active demand for money at most. The business failures occurring throughout the country during the last seven days number 29. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 29.

WHERE ARNOLD LIVED.

A Philadelphia Itelle Destroyed—Once Visited by Washington Irving.

One of the most interesting structures in the city was demolished recently, says the Philadelphia Press. It was the very last of the old frame buildings on the whole length of Market street from the Delaware to the Schuylkill, and its history co-ers a period of a century and a quarter, and teems with the names of famous men and the details of famous events. A great warehouse is to occupy the site, its present owner a clothing merchant, having acquired title to it very recently.

In 1767 the property, not, however, in the condition it afterward assumed, passed into the hands of Jacob Hiltzheimer. When Benedict Arnold planned his famous and infamous treason he wrote to Clinton in New York, suggesting that an emissary be sent to Philadelphia for a conference. Clinton was given papers and details that his agent might gain admittance to the city, and Arnold engaged to meet him in disguise outside the Hiltzheimer property. For some nights the traitor loitered around the house, paying occasional visits to a tavern around the corner on Seventh street.

Clinton was too suspicious to send anyone, however, and Arnold went down Market street to the house in disgust. When his carriage was pursued in the streets by a mob in consequence of unpopular enactments, Arnold took refuge from the malcontents in this building. The hotheads wanted to burn it down, but the troops interfered. The great procession on the occasion of the hanging of the traitor in effigy after the consummation of his Iscariot-like act in 1780 was reviewed from the windows of this house, and speeches were made by the city's celebrities.

The little house came gruesomely into prominence in 1793 when the yellow fever epidemic scourged the city. Readers of Charles Brockden Brown's novels will remember his account of the physician who took a stricken youth home to his wife and family, although fever sufferers were cast out to die by many. The incident is based on an actual occurrence at this modest structure. The dwellers in the house worked night and day to relieve the general desolation and some of the family died in consequence. Brown, the novelist, had a great fondness for the house, and a minute description of the neighborhood is given in one of his works.

The tavern around the corner was the center of such wild revelry that Washington felt bound to finally refrain from going there. He had no objection to the three-story cottage, however, and it was the scene of the interviews he had successively with Jefferson and with Hamilton in endeavoring to patch up the disagreement of those two statesmen. During Hamilton's intrigue with Mrs. Reynolds the lovers agreed to meet outside this house as the pamphlet now in the Ridgway library shows, and it was by watching here that the husband claimed to have found out what was going on.

The next famous man to visit the little house was Washington Irving. He called to verify some anecdotes connecting the father of his country with the building, and found many valuable letters and papers stored away in its attic, of which he made use in the "Life of Washington."

Like all houses which have passed their prime and relaxed quietly into old age, the structure was utilized by tenants for various purposes and it ceased to be conspicuously interesting until 1875. In that year it first became the resort of the city's scenic painters, and so continued for many years. The Bohemian club, composed of members of the painting fraternity and kindred spirits, met there every Monday night until a year or two since.

A Famous Tunnel.

The famous Khajah tunnel of India pierces the Khwaja Amran mountains about sixty miles north of Inetta at an elevation of 5,400 feet. It is 12,500 feet long and was constructed broad enough to carry a double line of rails.

Curlett's Pinworm Remedy, for man or beast, is a compound that effectually removes these troublesome parasites, which are such a great annoyance to stock. If bowels are bound up, one or two doses will put them in proper condition.

TESTIMONIALS.

Jas. Story, Birkett, Mich., says: "I had a mare troubled with pinworms, and gave her Curlett's Pinworm Remedy, which removed the pinworms."

Jas. E. Davis, Delhi Mills, Mich., says: "I cured a horse that had been afflicted two years with thrush, by using a dollar bottle of Curlett's Thrush Remedy. The horse was cured two years ago, and has shown no symptoms of the disease since."

Fred Pfitzenmaier, Dexter, Mich., says: "One of my horses became lame, and I examined the foot, which had a bad smell (thrush) and used a dollar bottle of Curlett's Thrush Remedy, which removed the smell, and cured the lameness, and two weeks after I commenced using the Remedy, the horse was cured."

The late Wm. Pfitzenmaier, Fredonia, Mich., says: "I had three horses afflicted with thrush so that I could not use them on my farm, for they were lame in the hind or fore feet and some in both, and the odor of the feet was very offensive. Got two bottles of Curlett's Thrush Remedy; after 3 or four applications the smell was removed and lameness was gone and the disease is cured. I began using the horses two weeks after using the Remedy."

Geo. Andrews, Dansville Mich. says: "I had a horse with a cracked hoof, crack extending from hair to half way down to bottom of hoof, and when I squeezed foot, matter would run out, used a bottle of Curlett's Thrush Remedy, which healed the crack. Have found it good for healing hoofs that are cut by nails, calked shoes or sharp points. If rubbed on rough hoofs, it produces a bright smooth surface."
