"COME ON, BOYS!"
Synopsis.—In December, 1918, four men gather in a hotel in Berne and hear one of the quartet outline a plan to paralyze Great Britain and at the same time seize world power. The other three, Hocking, a marican, and Steineman and Von Gratz, Germans, all millionaires, agree to the scheme, providing another man, Hiram Potts, an American, is taken in. The instigator of the plot gives his name as Comte de Gay, but when he leaves for England with his daughter he decides to use the name Carl Peterson. Capt Hugh (Bull-Dog) Drummond, a retired officer, advises for work that will give him excitement, aiming "X." As a result he meets Phyllis Benton, a young woman who answered his ad. She tells him of strange murders and robberies of which she suspects a band headed by Peterson and Henry Lakington. Drummond decides to go to The Larches, Miss Benton's home. Peterson and Lakington stop his car and look him over.

"He's so motionless," answered Hugh. "The bally fellow hasn't moved a muscle since I've been here. I believe he'd sit on a hornet's nest, and leave the inmates guessing. Great gift, Mr. Lakington. Shows a strength of will but rarely met with—a mind which rises above mere vulgar curiosity."
"It is undoubtedly a great gift to have such a mind, Captain Drummond," said Lakington. "And if it isn't born in a man, he should most certainly try to cultivate it. Shall we be seeing you this evening?"

ing to nightingales in the country; or I might be consuming steak and oysters preparatory to going to a night club. So long. . . Hope you don't break down again so suddenly."
He watched the Rolls-Royce start, but seemed in no hurry to follow suit. And his many friends, who were wont to regard Hugh Drummond as a mass of brawn not too plentifully supplied with brains, would have been puzzled had they seen the look of keen concentration on his face, as he stared along the white dusty road. He could not say why, but suddenly and very certainly the conviction had come to him that this was no hoax and no fog-pull—but grim and sober reality. In his imagination he heard the sudden sharp order to stop the instant they were over the hill, so that Peterson might have a chance of inspecting him; in a flash of intuition he knew that these two men were no ordinary people, and that he was suspect. Two thoughts were dominant in his mind. The first was that there was some mystery about the motionless, unnatural man who had sat beside the driver; the second was a distinct feeling of relief that his automatic was fully loaded.

THREE.
At half-past five he stopped in front of Godalming postoffice. To his surprise the girl handed him a wire, and Hugh tore the yellow envelope open quickly. It was from Denny, and it was brief and to the point:
"Phone message received. AAA. Must see you Carlton tea day after tomorrow. Going Godalming now. AAA. Message ends."
With a slight smile he noticed the military phraseology—Denny at one time in his career had been a signaler—and then he frowned. "Must see you." She should—at once.
He turned to the girl and inquired the way to The Larches. It was about two miles, he gathered, on the Guildford road, and impossible to miss. A bigish house standing well back in its own grounds.
"Is it anywhere near a house called The Elms?" he asked.
"Next door, sir," said the girl. "The gardens adjoin."
He thanked her, and having torn up the telegram into small pieces, he got into his car. There was nothing for it, he had decided, but to drive boldly up to the house, and say that he had come to call on Miss Benton. He had never been a man who heat about the bush, and simple methods appealed to him—a trait in his character which many a boxer, addicted to tortuous cunning in the ring, had good cause to remember. What more natural, he reflected, than to drive over and see such an old friend?
He had no difficulty in finding the house, and a few minutes later he was ringing the front-door bell. It was answered by a maid-servant.
"Is Miss Benton in?" Hugh asked with a smile which at once won the girl's heart.
"She has only just come back from London, sir," she answered doubtfully. "I don't know whether. . ."
"Would you tell her that Captain Drummond called?" said Hugh as the maid hesitated. "That I happened to find myself near here, and came on chance of seeing her?"

Once again the smile was called into play, and the girl hesitated no longer. "Will you come inside, sir?" she said. "I will go and tell Miss Phyllis."
She ushered him into the drawing-room and closed the door. It was a charming room, just such as he would have expected with Phyllis. Big windows, opening down to the ground, led out on to a lawn, which was already a blaze of color. A few great oak trees threw a pleasant shade at the end of the garden, and partially showing through them, he could see another house which he rightly assumed was The Elms. In fact, even as he heard the door open and shut behind him, he saw Peterson come out of a small summer-house and commence strolling up and down, smoking a cigar. Then he turned round and faced the girl.
Charming as she had looked in London, she was doubly so now, in a simple linen frock which showed off her figure to perfection. But if he thought he was going to have any leisure to enjoy the picture undisturbed, he was soon disillusioned.
"Why have you come here, Captain Drummond?" she said, a little breathlessly. "I said the Carlton the day after tomorrow."
"Unfortunately," said Hugh, "I'd left London before that message came. My servant wired it on to the post-office here. Not that it would have made any difference. I should have come, anyway."
An involuntary smile hovered round serious again. "It's very dangerous for quietly. If once those men suspect anything, God knows what will happen."

It was on the tip of his tongue to tell her that it was too late to worry about that; then he changed his mind. "And what is there suspicious," he asked. "In an old friend who happens to be in the neighborhood dropping in to call? Wherefore your telephone message? What's the worry?"
She hit her lip and drummed with her fingers on the arm of the chair. "If I tell you," she said at length. "Will you promise me, on your word of honor, that you won't go blundering into The Elms, or do anything foolish like that?"
"At the present moment I'm very comfortable where I am, thanks," remarked Hugh.
"I know," she said; "but I'm so dreadfully afraid that you're the type of person who . . . who . . ."
She paused, at a loss for a word. "Who bellows like a bull, and charges head down," interrupted Hugh with a grin. She laughed with him, and just for a moment their eyes met, and she read in his something quite foreign to the point at issue. In fact, it is to be feared that the question of Lakington and his companions was not engrossing Drummond's mind, as it doubtless should have been, to the exclusion of all else.

"It's Very Dangerous for You to Come Here," She Remarked Quietly.
"They're so utterly unscrupulous," she continued hurriedly, "so fiendishly clever, that even you would be a child in their hands."
Hugh endeavored to dissemble his pleasure at that little word "even" and only succeeded in frowning horribly.

"I will be discretion itself," he assured her firmly.
"I suppose I shall have to trust you," she said. "Have you seen the evening papers today?"
"I looked at the ones that come out in the morning labeled six p. m.; before I had lunch," he answered. "Is there anything of interest?"
She handed him a copy of the Planet. "Read that little paragraph in the second column." She pointed to it, as he took the paper, and Hugh read it aloud.
"Mr. Hiram C. Potts—the celebrated American millionaire—is progressing favorably. He has gone into the country for a few days, but is sufficiently recovered to conduct business as usual." He laid down the paper and looked at the girl sitting opposite. "One is pleased," he remarked in a puzzled tone, "for the sake of Mr. Potts. To be ill and have a name like that is more than most men could stand. . . . But I don't quite see."
"That man was stopping at the Carlton, where he met Lakington," said the girl. "He is a multi-millionaire, over here in connection with some big steel trust; and when multi-millionaires get friendly with Lakington, their health frequently does suffer."
"But this paper says he's getting better," objected Drummond. "Sufficiently recovered to conduct business as usual."
"If he is sufficiently recovered to conduct business as usual, why did he send his confidential secretary away yesterday morning on an urgent mission to Belfast?"
"Search me," said Hugh. "Incidentally, how do you know he did?"
"I asked at the Carlton this morning," she answered. "I said I'd come after a job as typist for Mr. Potts. They told me at the inquiry office that he was ill in bed and unable to see anybody. So I asked for his secretary, and they told me what I've just told you—that he had left for Belfast that morning and would be away several days. It may be that there's nothing in it; on the other hand, it may be that there's a lot. And it's only by following up every possible clue," she continued fiercely, "that I can hope to heat those fiends and get daddly out of their clutches."
Drummond nodded gravely, and did not speak. For into his mind had flashed suddenly the remembrance of that sinister, motionless figure seated by the chauffeur. The wildest guesswork certainly no vestige of proof.

thought struck. And as he turned it over in his mind, and as he prepared to laugh at himself for his credulity—millionaires are not removed against their will, in broad daylight, from one of the biggest hotels in London, to sit in immovable silence in an open car—the door opened and an elderly man came in.
Hugh rose, and the girl introduced the two men. "An old friend, daddy," she said. "You must have heard me speak of Captain Drummond."
"I don't recall the name at the moment, my dear," he answered courteously—a fact which was hardly surprising—"but I fear I'm getting a little forgetful. You'll stop and have some dinner, of course."
Hugh bowed. "I should like to, Mr. Benton. Thank you very much. I'm afraid the hour of my call was a little informal, but being round in these parts, I felt I must come and look Miss Benton up."
His host smiled absentmindedly, and walking to the window, stared through the gathering dusk at the house opposite, half hidden in the trees. And Hugh, who was watching him from under lowered lids, saw him suddenly clench both hands in a gesture of despair.
It cannot be said that dinner was a meal of sparkling gaiety. Mr. Benton was palpably ill at ease, and beyond a few desultory remarks spoke hardly at all; while the girl, who sat opposite Hugh, though she made one or two valiant attempts to break the long silences, spent most of the meal in covertly watching her father. If anything more had been required to convince Drummond of the genuineness of his interview with her at the Carlton the preceding day, the atmosphere at this strained and silent party supplied it.
As if unconscious of anything peculiar he rambled on in his usual inconsistent method, heedless of whether he was answered or not; but all the time his mind was busily working. He had already decided that a Rolls-Royce was not the only car on the market which could break down mysteriously, and with the town so far away, his host could hardly fail to ask him to stop the night. And then—he had not yet quite settled how—he proposed to have a closer look at The Elms.
At length the meal was over, and the maid, placing the decanter in front of Mr. Benton, withdrew from the room.
"You'll have a glass of port, Captain Drummond?" remarked his host, removing the stopper, and pushing the bottle toward him. "An old pre-war wine which I can vouch for."
Hugh smiled, and even as he lifted the heavy old cut glass, he stiffened suddenly in his chair. A cry—half shout, half scream, and stifled at once—had come echoing through the open windows. With a crash the stopper fell from Mr. Benton's nerveless fingers, breaking the finger-bowl in front of him, while every vestige of color left his face.
"It's something these days to be able to say that," remarked Hugh, pouring out himself a glass. "Who, Miss Benton?" He looked at the girl who was staring fearfully out of the window, and forced her to meet his eye. "It will do you good."

His tone was compelling, and after a moment's hesitation, she pushed the glass over to him. "Will you pour it out?" she said, and he saw that she was trembling all over.
"Did you—did you hear—anything?" With a vain endeavor to speak calmly, his host looked at Hugh.
"That night-bird?" he answered easily. "Eerie noises they make, don't they? Sometimes in France, when everything was still, and only the ghostly green flares went hissing up, one used to hear 'em. Startled nervous sentries out of their lives." He talked on, and gradually the color came back to the other man's face. But Hugh noticed that he drained his port at a gulp, and immediately refilled his glass.
Outside everything was still; no repetition of that short, strangled cry again disturbed the silence. With the training bred of many hours in No Man's Land, Drummond was listening, even while he was speaking, for the faintest suspicious sound—but he heard nothing. The soft whispering night-noises came gently through the window; but the man who had screamed once did not even whimper again. He remembered hearing a similar cry near the brick-stacks at Guinchy, and two nights later he had found the giver of it, at the edge of a mine-crater, with glazed eyes that still held in them the horror of the final second. And more persistently than ever, his thoughts centered on the fifth occupant of the Rolls-Royce.

"It was with almost a look of relief that Mr. Benton listened to his tale of woe about his car.
"Of course you must stop here for the night," he cried. "Phyllis, my dear, will you tell them to get a room ready?"
With an inscrutable look at Hugh, in which thankfulness and apprehension seemed mingled, the girl left the room. There was an unnatural glitter in her father's eyes—a flush on his cheeks hardly to be accounted for by the warmth of the evening; and it struck Drummond that during the time he had been pretending to look at his car, Mr. Benton had been fortifying himself. It was obvious, even to the soldier's unprofessional eye, that the man's nerves had gone to pieces, his daughter's worst forebodings were likely to be fulfilled. He talked disjointedly and fast; his hands were not steady, and he seemed to be always waiting for something to happen.
Hugh had not been in the room ten minutes before his host produced the whisky, and during the time that he took to drink a mild nightcap, Mr. Benton succeeded in lowering three extremely strong glasses of spirit. And what made it the more sad was that the man was obviously not a heavy drinker by preference.
At eleven o'clock Hugh rose and said good night.
"You'll ring if you want anything, won't you?" said his host. "We don't have very many visitors here, but I hope you'll find everything you require. Breakfast at nine."
Drummond closed the door behind him, and stood for a moment in silence, looking round the hall. It was deserted, but he wanted to get the geography of the house firmly imprinted on his mind. He stepped across toward the drawing-room. Inside, as he hoped, he found the girl.
She rose the instant he came in, and stood by the mantelpiece with her hands locked.
"What was it?" she half whispered—"that awful noise at dinner?"
He looked at her gravely for a while, and then he shook his head. "Shall we leave it as a night-bird for the present?" he said quietly. Then he leaned toward her, and took her hands in his own. "Go to bed, little girl," he ordered; "this is my show. And, may I say, I think you're just wonderful. Thank God you saw my advertisement!"
Gently he released her hands, and walking to the door, held it open for her. "If by any chance you should shrink back in terror, and reach for the pen. But what impressed him most in that momentary flash of action was Peterson. There was something inhuman in his complete passivity. Even as he watched the man signing his name, no trace of emotion showed on his face—whereas on Lakington's there shone a fiendish satisfaction.

The document was still lying on the table, when Hugh produced his revolver. He knew there was foul play about, and the madness of what he had suddenly made up his mind to do never struck him; being that manner of fool, he was made that way. But he breathed a pious prayer that he would shoot straight—and then he held his breath. The crack of the shot and the bursting of the only electric light bulb in the room were almost simultaneous, and the next second, with a roar of "Come on, boys," he burst through the window. At an immense advantage over the others, who could see nothing for the moment, he blundered round the room. He timed the blow at Lakington to a nicety; he hit him straight on the point of the jaw and he felt the man go down like a log. Then he grabbed at the paper on the table, which tore in his hand, and picking the dazed signer up bodily, he rushed through the window onto the lawn. There was not an instant to be lost; only the impossibility of seeing when suddenly plunged into darkness, had enabled him to pull the thing off so far. And before that advantage disappeared he had to be back at The Larches with his burden, he light weight for "us" a man of his strength to carry.
But there seemed to be no pursuit, no hue and cry. As he reached the little gate he paused and looked back, and he fancied he saw outside the window a gleam of white, such as a shirt front. He lingered for an instant, peering into the darkness and recovering his breath, when with a vicious phut something buried itself in the tree beside him. Drummond lingered no more; long years of experience left no doubt in his mind as to what that something was.

The rescued man turns out to be Potts, the American.
The "Week-End."
Week-end means the end of the week, but by extension, the period from Friday night to Monday morning. In England the term is also used attributively, as the week-end holidays, and from this has sprung the verbal phrase "to week-end" meaning to employ the week-end as a holiday season. A well-known authority in alluding to the expression, week-end, says: "This brief holiday has got into serious history. No less an authority than Dr. R. S. Gardiner notes in his "Oliver Cromwell" that "Oliver—if he invented nothing else—may be regarded as the inventor of that modified form of enjoyment, to which hard-worked citizens have in our day given the name of the week-end."

Gently he released her hands, and walking to the door, held it open for her. "If by any chance you should hear anything in the night, come and go to sleep again."

"But what are you going to do?" she cried.
Hugh grinned. "I haven't the remotest idea," he answered. "Doubtless the Lord will provide."
The instant the girl had left the room Hugh switched off the lights, and stepped across to the curtains which covered the long windows. He pulled them aside, letting them come together behind him; then, cautiously, he unbolted one side of the big center window. Silently he dodged across the lawn toward the big trees at the end, and leaning up against one of them, he proceeded to make a more detailed survey of his objective, The Elms. It was the same type of house as the one he had just left, and the grounds seemed about the same size. A wire fence separated the two places, and in the darkness Hugh could just make out a small wicket-gate, closing a path which connected both houses. He tried it, and found to his satisfaction that it opened silently.
Save for one room on the ground-floor the house was in darkness, and Hugh determined to have a look at that room. There was a chink in the curtains, through which the light was streaming out, which struck him as having possibilities.
Keeping under cover, he edged toward it, and, at length, he got into a position from which he could see inside. And what he saw made him decide to chance it, and go even closer.
Seated at the table was a man he did not recognize; while on either side of him sat Lakington and Peterson. Lying on a sofa smoking a cigarette and reading a novel was a tall dark girl, who seemed completely uninterested in the proceedings of the other three. Hugh placed her at once as the doubtful daughter Irma, and resumed his watch on the group at the table.
A paper was in front of the man, and Peterson, who was smoking a large cigar, was apparently suggesting that he should make use of the pen which Lakington was obligingly holding in readiness. In all respects a harmless tableau, save for one small thing—the expression on the man's face. Hugh had seen it before often—only then it had been called shell-shock. The man was dazed, semi-unconscious. Every now and then he stared round the room, as if bewildered; then he would shake his head and pass his hand wearily over his forehead. For a quarter of an hour the scene continued, the talkhington produced an instrument from his pocket, and began to scribble on a piece of paper. Hugh watched him for a moment, and then he turned back to the group at the table. The man was still writing, and Peterson was still smoking. Hugh noticed that the man's hands were not steady, and he seemed to be always waiting for something to happen.

Hugh had not been in the room ten minutes before his host produced the whisky, and during the time that he took to drink a mild nightcap, Mr. Benton succeeded in lowering three extremely strong glasses of spirit. And what made it the more sad was that the man was obviously not a heavy drinker by preference.
At eleven o'clock Hugh rose and said good night.
"You'll ring if you want anything, won't you?" said his host. "We don't have very many visitors here, but I hope you'll find everything you require. Breakfast at nine."
Drummond closed the door behind him, and stood for a moment in silence, looking round the hall. It was deserted, but he wanted to get the geography of the house firmly imprinted on his mind. He stepped across toward the drawing-room. Inside, as he hoped, he found the girl.
She rose the instant he came in, and stood by the mantelpiece with her hands locked.
"What was it?" she half whispered—"that awful noise at dinner?"
He looked at her gravely for a while, and then he shook his head. "Shall we leave it as a night-bird for the present?" he said quietly. Then he leaned toward her, and took her hands in his own. "Go to bed, little girl," he ordered; "this is my show. And, may I say, I think you're just wonderful. Thank God you saw my advertisement!"
Gently he released her hands, and walking to the door, held it open for her. "If by any chance you should shrink back in terror, and reach for the pen. But what impressed him most in that momentary flash of action was Peterson. There was something inhuman in his complete passivity. Even as he watched the man signing his name, no trace of emotion showed on his face—whereas on Lakington's there shone a fiendish satisfaction.

The document was still lying on the table, when Hugh produced his revolver. He knew there was foul play about, and the madness of what he had suddenly made up his mind to do never struck him; being that manner of fool, he was made that way. But he breathed a pious prayer that he would shoot straight—and then he held his breath. The crack of the shot and the bursting of the only electric light bulb in the room were almost simultaneous, and the next second, with a roar of "Come on, boys," he burst through the window. At an immense advantage over the others, who could see nothing for the moment, he blundered round the room. He timed the blow at Lakington to a nicety; he hit him straight on the point of the jaw and he felt the man go down like a log. Then he grabbed at the paper on the table, which tore in his hand, and picking the dazed signer up bodily, he rushed through the window onto the lawn. There was not an instant to be lost; only the impossibility of seeing when suddenly plunged into darkness, had enabled him to pull the thing off so far. And before that advantage disappeared he had to be back at The Larches with his burden, he light weight for "us" a man of his strength to carry.
But there seemed to be no pursuit, no hue and cry. As he reached the little gate he paused and looked back, and he fancied he saw outside the window a gleam of white, such as a shirt front. He lingered for an instant, peering into the darkness and recovering his breath, when with a vicious phut something buried itself in the tree beside him. Drummond lingered no more; long years of experience left no doubt in his mind as to what that something was.

ANOTHER WOMAN ESCAPES

Georgetown, Ill.—"After my first baby was born I suffered so with my left side that I could not walk across the floor unless I was all humped over, holding to my side. I doctored with several doctors but found no relief and they said I would have to have an operation. My mother insisted on my taking Lydia E. Finkham's Vegetable Compound and I soon found relief. Now I can do all my own work and it is the Vegetable Compound that has saved me from an operation. I cannot praise my medicine too highly and I tell all of my friends and neighbors what the Compound did for me." — Mrs. MARGARET MCCUMBER, 27 S. Frazier St., Georgetown, Illinois.
Mrs. McCumber is one of the unnumbered thousands of housewives who struggle to keep about their daily tasks, while suffering from ailments peculiar to women with backache, aches, headaches, bearing-down pains and nervousness—and if every such woman should profit by her experience and give Lydia E. Finkham's Vegetable Compound a trial they would get well.

Enduring backaches so intense that sharp knives could not have hurt more, Mrs. A. J. Robbins, of Quebec, Tenn., regained health and happiness through DODD'S Kidney Pills.
Weakened kidneys made her case seem hopeless. Her back muscles were so stiff and weak that she could not get up from a chair. Doctors, treatments, medicines—nothing gave relief.
Despairing, Mrs. Robbins was finally induced to try DODD'S Kidney Pills. In a remarkably short time she regained her former good health—permanently freed from all kidney ailments. Mrs. Robbins writes: "I had not been taking DODD'S Kidney Pills long before this trouble left me. I cannot say too much in praise of DODD'S."

Natural Error.
Reville had been sounded and Private Pence came running out with his leggings on wrong. He jumped into the ranks and snapped into attention, but not until after the top kick had noticed his lapse from military sartorial perfection.
"Private Pence," he demanded, angrily, "why have you your leggings on wrong?"
"It was just a personal mistake," answered the offender.
"Mistake?"
"Yes. I had my legs crossed when I put them on."—American Legion Weekly.

He Knew.
The tramp shambled after the smartly dressed man carrying a prosperous looking bag.
"Give us a couple of coppers, governor!" he pleaded. "Just something to get some bread. Think wot it is ter be friendless, despised, 'ated by all—"
"Shut up, you fool!" said the man with the bag. "I'm an income tax collector."

Woman's National Foundation

MRS. MAUD WOOD PARK

WOMAN'S National foundation! That's the name of the latest organized activity of the newly enfranchised sex. No; it isn't a case of piling Ossa on Pellon. At least its organizers and promoters say it isn't. They say it will not tread on the toes of the General Federation of Women's Clubs or of the National League of Women Voters or of the National Woman's party or of the National Council of Women or any of the numerous other national organizations.

It's going to be, according to its organizers, a new organization whose sole purpose is to be the furtherance of all that is of interest to women.

And will the National Woman's foundation have headquarters in Washington? It will. In fact, it has already. This headquarters is described as "the lovely old Dean place, an old mansion surrounded by nearly ten acres of trees and lawns, a beautiful but deserted garden spot in the heart of Washington."

But this million dollars is but a drop in the bucket—and the bucket is to be a twelve-quart affair and full to the brim. There are to be a club home, a guest house or woman's hotel, an auditorium, an opera house, a sylvan theater for pageants, etc., etc.

How comes all this? Well, it's this way: The idea originated with Mrs. C. C. Calhoun. And she says this about its genesis: "It first suggested itself to me at the Democratic convention at San Francisco. I had gone out merely as a spectator, and with very little interest in suffrage. I was reared in Louisiana and I confess to still nursing the old traditions of the South as to men doing the work and the big things and women confining their influence to the home and community."

"As the convention progressed, my eyes were opened. I was simply amazed at the speeches made by the women. They were by far the most forceful and inspiring talks I heard. And when I saw how the men treated them every prejudice I had been harboring was overturned.

"It looks as if women are going to make pretty good national helpmates," thought I, "but they'll make much better if their activities are centralized and they have the right sort of leadership. They'll need help to do this. And all the way across the continent a plan was formulating in my mind, whereby I could aid, at least, the Southern women.

"Later, when I was asked by the men representing the Southern Commercial congress to become president general of their woman's auxiliary, it seemed to give just the impetus needed, for at once I saw in it an opportunity for organizing the women of the sixteen Southern states.

"Why not establish for them a clearing house at the national capital, where representatives could come on matters of interest and work as an organized unit? With our efforts concentrated in one unit, we could do a million times the amount working separately.

"The idea, when suggested, proved such a popular one that I was approached by organizations of women in the North, requesting that it be made a national movement, instead of being confined to the South.

"The foundation will be a clearing house for the nation's housekeepers. Governed as a democracy, it will have no purpose of its own except to further all the purposes of forward-looking women and women's organizations.

"It will be divorced from factionalism of any kind, and furnish a neutral meeting ground on which to work out woman's viewpoint on national and world questions affecting the common weal.

"The foundation will be very careful to avoid duplication of specific work being done by other established agencies. It will not interfere, for instance, with the work of the Red Cross, but will try to improve civic conditions in small towns by working for better schools, hospitals and general health and recreation facilities.

"In homely language, women need a switching board for the interchange of ideas and dissemination of information on their infinitely various interests.

"The most vital problem facing the sex on the threshold of its new endeavor is how to take stock of itself, how to find the full measure of its resources and marshal the strength of its collective intelligence."

The building program of the foundation is elaborate. It begins with the erection of a magnificent club home, beautiful as a temple, in which all women's organizations desiring headquarters in Washington will be invited to reserve space.

In conjunction with the club home, a guest house or woman's hotel will be built, so that members visiting in Washington may secure delightful accommodations at moderate expense.

An enormous auditorium is planned, with wings holding committee rooms, offices for club members, lecture rooms and ball rooms.

An opera house will be built and leased to American opera companies. There will be a sylvan theater for pageants and every modern facility for indoor and outdoor entertainment and health exercise.

Plans are also completed for the erection of a stately hall, to be known as the Hall of Remembrance. In this hall will be fifty columns, which will be engraved with the names of the women contributing most of the history of their respective state or territory. These women will be chosen by a special commission for each state, appointed by the governor, and final judgment on the names selected passed on by a national body of four or five distinguished educators and historians.

The flags of all states will be hung in this hall, which will be placed in a Temple of Triumph. On the dome of the temple will be a figure of Woman Triumphant, holding aloft in one hand the torch of life and, in the other, the scroll of knowledge.

The program of the foundation includes: Furtherance of the education of women in their civil rights and duties as citizens by giving and receiving instruction in history, civics and all other branches helpful to good citizenship.

The maintenance of a national bureau of club information, which will be prepared at all times to furnish data concerning organized women's activities of any type or locality.

The issuing of a bulletin of foundation progress, of governmental action and plans for civic betterment and of all news calculated to keep the women of today well informed on these problems.

The fostering of social intercourse through conventions, forums, the drama, chamber music and edited films.

The holding of a referendum on every important question affecting the whole welfare of womanhood, in order to make known the consensus of women's opinions.

Financial aid to movements for civic betterment. A sinking fund will be created and held as a permanent endowment. The interest from this fund will be available for use.

Upon the selection of the ten-acre million-dollar property twenty women, it is stated, pledged sufficient money to bind the purchase. Among the women mentioned in connection with the foundation are Mrs. John Hays Hammond, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mrs. Harriet Taylor Upton, Mrs. George Barnett and Mrs. Maud Wood Park, and many other distinguished persons. An advisory board of bankers and other business men has consented to weigh and report upon all matters of finance.

Patrick taught them the art of distilling. However this may be, it is a fact that during the first English invasion of Ireland in 1170, any number of stills were found, which, however, did not surprise the invaders, because as early as the sixth century a Welsh troubadour by the name of Taliesin had penned a lay on strong drink.

Jewish New Year's Day. New Year's day, as observed by the synagogue, is not a day of rejoicing, merely such as is in vogue at the beginning of the secular year. It is a day of memorial, or a "Day of Remembrance," on which the Jew is reminded of his duty and responsibility as a citizen. Tradition places the New Year celebration on the first day of the seventh month rather than the first month of the Jewish calendar. The reason, it is said, is that this day the world was created, while on the first day of the first month, the Jews were liberated from Egyptian bondage and, henceforth, began to count their months from that date.—Exchange.

Will Watters was pleasantly reminded of his sixty-first birthday, when nearly forty relatives were entertained at his home for dinner. He was presented with a fine rocking chair.

November 23, Mr and Mrs. S. T. Wasson reached the date of their golden wedding anniversary, the event being celebrated with "open house" at the E. N. Braley home, Wednesday afternoon from two to five.

Guests, about 40 in number, called during that time and were received by Mrs. Wasson, assisted by her daughter, Mrs. R. E. Baxter of Birmingham. The rooms were prettily decorated in the color scheme of yellow and white. Light refreshments were served in the different rooms and the occasion was one of real sociability.

Mr. and Mrs. Wasson were the recipients of beautiful gifts and messages of congratulation from friends near and far away.

One notable feature of the event was the presence of two other brides of fifty years ago, Mrs. S. G. Topping and Mrs. Levi Jacobs.

The twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of Mr and Mrs. Courtland Sweet was duly observed last Friday evening when friends and relatives invaded their home by way of surprise.

Refreshments featured in the evening's enjoyment, and Mr. and Mrs. Sweet were presented with a silver double vegetable dish, as a souvenir of the occasion.

We give our congratulations and wish for many more happy and prosperous years for them.

NEIGHBORING NEWS

MILFORD—Sometime during Saturday night the farm home of Frank Lesere was broken open and ransacked and a horse, buggy and harness and sixteen turkeys were stolen from the barn. The house had been closed for the winter by the owner and left in charge of a man who lived in the tenant house. When the latter went out to do the chores Sunday morning he found that the horse and rig had disappeared and further investigation revealed that the house had been entered and apparently some furnishings and silver taken, but just to what extent cannot be learned until the owner returns. Officers were notified and the tracks were followed up to the pavement on the Highland road at the outskirts of Milford without getting any clue that would throw any light on the robbery.

The Village Council at its meeting Monday night passed an ordinance which will require all cows which are used in furnishing milk or cream to be submitted to a yearly test for tuberculosis. The penalty for violation is placed at $50 fine or thirty days in jail. The ordinance goes into effect in 20 days.—Times.

CHELSEA—Concrete work on the Federal aid road known locally as the Territorial road, was completed Saturday when the gap near the Spencer farm, five miles west of Chelsea, was closed. A cement surfaced highway now extends from Detroit to Jackson, excepting a few miles of gravel between Ypsilanti and Ann Arbor. Between Ann Arbor and Jackson the cement will be surfaced with asphalt, and the asphalt gang is now working this side of Lima Center.—Tribune.

BROOKLYN—The Pop Corn Company, for whom most of the farmers in the vicinity of Brooklyn contracted to raise pop corn the past summer, have declared their inability to pay for the corn, according to contract, and as a result there promises to be all kinds of trouble to the growers. The company claims they have most of the previous crop on hand and can sell it only at a loss. Springport Signal.

STOCKBRIDGE—Stockbridge High School Football Team reports a very interesting time at Howell last week, where they played a game with Howell High. Manager Bennett says the Stockbridge team was forced to leave the gymnasium before completing their change of clothes, and were then set upon by a mob for the reason that one of the Howell players was hurt in the last quarter of the game "some reason." After considerable manhandling by the mob, the sheriff was finally called and restored order. As far as we can learn Howell is done with Stockbridge, so far as sports are concerned, for good and all. This is not the only occasion that the sporting bloods of Howell have shown their colors and we hope it will be the last time they will have a chance.—Stockbridge Brief-Sun.

Hand-Made Toys

Here are two of many animals that are due to arrive on Christmas morning. A black kitty that will stand any amount of hard usage is very easy to make, requiring only a pair of silk stockings that have survived the worn-out feet. Cut off the worn feet and trim out the ankles in a curved line to form the ears. Sew a seam along this line, turn right side out and stuff with cotton to form the body. Wind the remainder of the tops with small cord to form the tail and tie a gay bow of ribbon at the end. Two white bone buttons make the eyes and heavy silk floss the mouth and whiskers and Miss Kitty is dressed up with a bow at the neck. The elephant is made of gray duvetyn, plush or cotton flannel and cut by a paper pattern. His eyes are shoe buttons, his tusks white cloth.

Comparatively little advertising has been done for Foley Kidney Pills, yet they are well known, and those who know their splendid healing properties never accept an imitation or substitute for the genuine Foley. Pains Banished, Health Restored. "In September, 1915, I was stricken with lumbago and was unable to turn myself in bed. I was under the care of a physician but obtained no relief. A neighbor brought me a half bottle of Foley Kidney Pills and she had been similarly afflicted and they had relieved her. So I tried them, and after taking three bottles was well and on my feet. One day not long ago there entered the office of a western business man a friend who had been much intrigued by an incident he had witnessed some days before in that same office.

"Jones, old top," said he, "that was a queer conference you had with Smith the other day. When I looked in on you, both of you were sprinting round the office like two racers or two prize fighters."

Jones frowned. "Well, you see," he explained, "I'm very well read in this efficiency stuff, and I know, of course, that in an important conference you must always have your back to the light, so that your thoughts cannot be read. But Smith, too, has been taking an efficiency course, I suppose. He was certainly wise to that dodge. ## WASHINGTON NOW WORLD'S CAPITAL

SEEMINGLY, ALL THE PEOPLES OF THE EARTH HAVE THEIR REPRESENTATIVES THERE.

LODGINGS ARE HARD TO FIND

Picturesque Garb, Strange Uniforms and Many Foreign Tongues Make the City Interesting—Chinese Prove Themselves Clever Linguists.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

Washington.—Washington now is in the largest sense the capital city of the World. In truth, Washington has been the cosmopolitan center of things ever since the World war began. Certainly the eyes of all the peoples of the earth are on this Potomac town today.

Washington residents do not know their city. It is changed in the proverbial twinkling of an eye from an overgrown country village to a place restless with movement and crowded with activities. Is Washington ever to return to normalcy? Perhaps so, and perhaps not; but there are those in this town who hope that such may be the case.

Once on a time, and a time not so long ago, one at certain seasons could go into the lobby of the great hotel in this city and find, say, two or three semi-disconsolate strangers, who were wondering how they happened to land in a desert. There were seasons of the year not long ago when the hotels in this town shut off from use whole floors of their buildings and discharged fully one-half the members of their staff of employees.

Does anything of that kind happen in Washington today? It does not, and the condition, while not in the remote past, already is forgotten. A visitor to this town is lucky today if he can find a place to lay his head, and luckier if he is not compelled to scowl at the charge for his bed and board, which he finds set down upon the bill which is presented to him.

Washington hotel men, boarding house women and apartment house owners are not called upon frequently to speed the parting guest. Everyone hangs on to what he has in the way of there is not an all-night jazz band doing business next door.

Peoples of the World There.

This is a picturesque place today, and in a way, to American eyes, it is a sort of a grotesque place. The East and the West and the middle lands have met here. One sees strange civilian garb and strange uniforms. Men and women, however, seem to be pretty near alike the world over. In a human nature way, for the visitors from here, there and the other place are pleasant-spoken folk, genial-faced and as grateful for courtesies as cats for cream.

Are the peoples of the world here? Go for your answer into any one of ten hotels. You will hear French as the dominant language in one, Japanese in another, Italian in another, Slovak in another, and other languages in others. The Washington "monument," albeit it is a completed structure, might well stand today for the Tower of Babel.

Interpreters are here in considerable numbers. The trouble with some few of the interpreters is they do not know how to "interp." Some of them learned their English in the schools of their native land, and as there is a vast difference between a school-taught language and a community-taught language, the difficulties of some of the interpreters may be understood. They are willing gentlemen, but there are frequent Americanisms which are beyond the scope of their understandings and beyond the trick of their tongues.

Chinese Know "American" Tongue.

The Chinese always have been noted as good copiers. It is said that their artisans can reproduce anything on earth, when once it is presented to them for study. The old school-book story of the English sailor who took his patched trousers to a Chinese tailor and asked him to make him a new pair, is of course familiar. The Chinese tailor reproduced the trousers, patches and all.

So it is, perhaps, with English. The student Chinese seem to be able to reproduce the English language more perfectly than it lies within the power of the European to do. The Chinese who are here know American slang as they know the language of the American savant. They can talk "East side" or "Harvard" at will. They are a wonderful lot.

English and French are the languages of the conference. It is lucky that French was included for one or two of the great Frenchmen who are here do not know "Yes" or "No" in English. Of course, all the proceedings of the conference eventually will be translated into almost every tongue on earth, but first they will go into English and then into French. It is said that the diplomacy of this conference will not be that kind of diplomacy which uses language to conceal thoughts.

Popular Support Asked.

It is not a "presumption of knowledge" to say that the American administration and the American congress have a heart desire for an intelligent, interested and supporting public sentiment for the conference on the limitation of armament which now has begun its sessions.

Today men of many nations are sitting down together in an attempt to right the world. Millions of the earth's people are watching the proceedings and hoping for relief from intolerable burdens. The administration is asking for the support of all Americans for the endeavor which it initiated. The United States already has promised, if the others agree to follow suit, to scrap many warships.

This is the time of the beginning of what not at all lightly may be called a "showdown" on war and on armaments. Every conferee plenipotentiary knows that the people of his country want success to come out of the labor that has just started in this Capital city.

It will not be long before the American people, watching the progress of the conference, will be able to determine whether the rulers and the diplomats and the "professional" officials of the countries of the world desire success, or hope that the old order which gave to them the opportunity, but not the right, to shape national destinies shall prevail.

In articles which have attempted to give the Washington view of the various contending elements which enter into the work in hand, the extreme pacifists, the duffers who won't understand, and the militarists all have been described after their kind. Washington believes today that some of the opponents of success will try to influence the conferees this way or that way and will resort to all kinds of technical and delaying dodges.

No American Suspicion of Japan.

It is going to be something of an American diplomatic task to keep the various conferees in the straight path to the main point, "the limitation of armament." It can be said, of course, with a certain definiteness, that if some problems are solved satisfactorily, a limitation quickly can be put upon the armaments of the world. The prickly pear cactus grows in the path leading through the chaparral intricacies of diplomacy as it affects the Far East.

In this connection it can be said today that the American government seemingly entertains no suspicion of the good faith of the Japanese, who are naturally most concerned in the methods of the solution of Oriental problems. It remains for the Japanese to show as the conference proceeds whether or not the faith of the American State department is misplaced.

There seems to be a recognition in space somewhere for her surplus population and for emarged conditions which will make her people prosperous.

Military and Naval Men Agree.

There are advisers in military and naval matters for each country's body of conferees. Thus far in the preliminaries there has not come from a single soldier or sailor an intimation of a desire that present conditions in armaments shall continue. American naval men seem to be willing to cut armaments, and so do American army men, although they know of the possibility of a loss of the means of livelihood for many of their brethren (guined) to arms. The American sailors have acquiesced in a proposal to scrap many of their ships.

What has been said here of American military men applies equally strongly to the representatives of the armed services of other countries. They seem to be looking at the whole matter unselfishly, and as truth generally is to be found with the uniform, there is little reason to doubt the sincerity of the professional soldiers and sailors.

It appears today as if there will be plenty of publicity for the proceedings of the conference. There will be executive sessions, of course, because such sessions are necessary. There are certain things to be set forth by the representatives of each nation which they probably do not wish to set forth publicly because of possible misunderstandings. The American delegation, however, will know and understand, and the American delegation is made up of men who are sympathetic with the cause in hand and who can be depended upon to guard the interests of the American people.

Unknown Must Be Always Unknown.

There probably is not in the United States a father or mother whose son was reported among the missing in the World war, and of whom nothing has been heard, who does not hope in heart, all hope of seeing the loved one alive again gone, that the unknown soldier now resting in Arlington cemetery is the household son who went forth to war.

There are fathers and mothers in this country who realize that unless the dead boy lying in Arlington were unknown beyond the possibility of future identification he would not be lying there as the representative not only of the unknown dead, but of all the living. And yet there are other fathers and mothers who, not realizing that the government made absolutely certain that the unknown forever was to remain unknown, are writing letters to the authorities in Washington today asking for the measurements of the body of the dead unknown, asking the color of his hair, his complexion and whether there were such and such scars upon his body.

This simply goes to show how hope springs eternal in the breast of the members of a lost one's family, and of course it goes to show also that those who seek such information do not know, and do not allow themselves to know, that the unknown must, because of the very circumstances in the case, forever remain unknown.

HENS THAT DO NOT MOLT UNTIL LATE ARE BEST EGG PRODUCERS

The Best Layers of the Flock and Those That Should Be Kept for Breeders Do Not Molt Until November.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Hens that devote too much attention early in the season to the fall styles in feathers are not the kind that please the flock owner. It costs too much to support them and they demand too long a vacation period. But the hen that wears her old clothes until autumn has almost passed is the best of the flock, for she has kept on laying since the previous fall or winter. So now when you see a bird that looks shabbier than the others, do not conclude that she is of the no-account kind and that her smartly dressed sisters are the ones to keep.

Take Short Vacation.

Of course some of the hens that molted earlier, say in August and September, are profitable enough to keep, but the cream of the flock is made up of hens that do not change their feathers until October or November. Their molting will require only a few weeks and they will probably be laying again by the 1st of January. The poor ones, the early-molting loafers, will not begin until about this time, even though they have been resting since the middle of the summer. It takes one about two months and the other twice that long to get back into production.

The poultry keeper who has an eye for business will not neglect this worn-looking late layer, for she is the best profit maker he has. She needs a highly nutritious ration if she is to be tain in other feeds, has been found a good one.

Mash.	Scratch Mixture.
1 lb. corn meal	1 lb. cracked corn
1 lb. bran	1 lb. wheat
1 lb. meat scrap	1 lb. oats
1 lb. middlings	1 lb. barley
1 lb. ground oats

Poultrymen resort to every possible means to get their hens to eat a great deal of feed, especially in the winter when the days are short. One way is to cut the morning scratch feed to about half. The hungry bird then goes to the mash trough and gorges on the dry mash. Then to increase the consumption of mash some of it is fed wet at noon and the hens will eat it when they would take no more of it dry.

DARKENED CELLAR IS URGED FOR POTATOES

Exposure to Light Quickly Injures Quality of Tuber.

Temperature Best Suited for Proper Preservation is One Ranging From 32 to 45 Degrees—Large Files Are Not Favored.

The object of storing any product is to preserve its quality during as long a period as may be necessary or Investigations by the bureau of plant industry, United States Department of Agriculture, show that the temperature best suited to the proper preservation of potatoes is one ranging from 32 to 45 degrees. In regions where the powdery dry rot occurs a temperature of 33 to 36 degrees holds the disease in check better than a higher one.

It is found best not to store potatoes in large piles when they are moist or covered with moist earth, as they quickly develop sufficient heat to injure the vitality of the tubers. In through unfavorable weather conditions it becomes necessary to store potatoes when they are wet and dirty, they should be spread out in a thin layer until they have become dry, after which they may be piled up. It is not desirable to store potatoes to a greater depth than six feet.

Potatoes intended for table use should always be stored in a darkened cellar or storage house. Exposure to light quickly injures the quality of the potato for food purposes.

SMALL HOUSE FOR CHICKENS

New Lumber Will Make Best Appearance, but Packing Boxes Will Answer Purpose Well.

In building a poultry house, new lumber will of course make the best appearing structure and will also be somewhat easier to work up because it can be bought in lengths most advantageous for the purpose. Houses for a few hens can sometimes be constructed from packing boxes, while used material or second-hand lumber, if it can be purchased cheaply and is close at hand, will sometimes lower the cost of the house materially.

Occasionally, also, where a high board fence is available, the house can be built in the corner of the fence, thus saving the construction of the back and one side of the house. Care must be used to cover or batten the cracks, either by means of strips or by the use of roofing paper. Construct the building so that the front of your henhouse will admit the sunlight.

Send to the Division of Publications, United States Department of Agriculture, for bulletins containing plan and illustrations; Farmer's Bulletin 889 is a good one to have on hand.

CEMENT FLOOR FOR FEEDING

Farmer Should Remember to Give Slope to One Side to Insure Necessary Drainage.

Farmers who build cement feeding floors should remember to give the floor a good slope to one side. This insures good drainage, facilitates cleaning and makes it possible for the feeding floor to completely fulfill its function of providing a clean place to feed hogs. Some farmers have so located these floors as to get a large amount of rainwater from roofs of nearby buildings, which flushes the floor after each rainstorm and helps materially to keep them clean and sanitary.

POKER ROOMS RAIDED

Some time ago Editor Adams of the Ploverville Review allowed that his town was getting into an undesirable condition. Folks went out in their autos on Sunday and a lot of other things that were not satisfactory. So last Saturday night the Sheriff's force investigated and the result was that the alleged proprietors of two poker rooms, and ten men participating, were arrested.

Arthur Benjamin and Chas Curtis, said to be the proprietors, were assessed $60 and $50 respectively and the ten others paid $10 each.

Robert Ling and Edward Dingeman, the latter the proprietor of a pool room, were bound over to the circuit court, each furnishing $1000 bail, to answer to the charge of having liquor in illegal possession.

Anyone who knows how to handle a paint brush and oil colors or understands the new art of painting with colored sealing wax can make the book for telephone numbers pictured here. It is merely a piece of black oilcloth folded over leaves of white paper. Small holes punched through at each end allow a black silk cord to bind the book and provide for hanging it up at the same time.

A powder box and a rouge box shown below it are covered with black lacquer and decorated with colored sealing wax that simulates ribbon and flowers.

Recovering Art Treasures.

Czecho-Slovakia is the latest of the states to begin the recovery of art and historical objects awarded under the treaty of St. Germain and now in the palaces and museums of Vienna. A commission has just been appointed for that purpose.

These comprise, among other things, the almost priceless documents, historical memoirs, maps and other material which Thaulow von Rosenthal removed from Prague by order of the Empress Maria Theresa. Then there are the valuable documents originally contained in the Royal Aulic chancery of Bohemia and the Aulic Chamber of Accounts of Bohemia, as well as the works of art formerly in the royal chateau of Prague and other castles of the Hapsburgs located in what is now Czecho-Slovakia and which were removed to Vienna during the reigns of Emperors Matthias, Ferdinand II, Charles VI (about 1788-1837) and Francis Joseph I.

"St. Napoleon."

Saint Napoleon sounds somewhat strange to ears of English-speaking persons, but it is nevertheless a fact. At the heyday of his fame, Bonaparte discovered that it would be well for him, and the Napoleonic dynasty which he hoped to found, that a name patron should find prominence in French history. With obliging zeal his ecclesiastical supporters managed to trace an obscure faithful one Neopolas, who had been martyred in Alexandria. Upon his memory the aureole was placed; the French bishops received a pastoral letter from their cardinal chief; and Pius VII called St. Napoleon into being. His day was the emperor's birthday, August 15, and upon it the dual event was celebrated.

Wearing Out Clubs.

He had taken up golf, and after playing a week he went to buy some new clubs.

"Did you break the ones I sold you about a week ago?" asked the club dealer.

"No, I didn't break any of 'em," was the reply, "but I took so many shots with 'em that they're worn out!"—Yonkers Statesman.

LAXATIVE for Aged People

THE BANE of old age is constipation. The bowels become weak and unable to perform their functions without aid. For this purpose only the mildest and gentlest laxative should be used. The use of harsh cathartics aggravates the trouble and makes the constipation worse. Chamberlain's Tablets are a favorite with people of middle age and older on account of their gentle action.

Sweets for Christmas

You cannot think of anyone who will not be delighted to receive a gift like that illustrated here. It is a half-dozen glasses filled with jelly, preserves and marmalade, very attractively arranged in a wicker basket. The tin covers of the glasses are lacquered with black lacquer and a white gummed letter is placed in the center of each one. A spray of fruit or blossoms painted on the lid with sealing wax, together with the letter, tells the kind of jelly or preserves the glass contains. An apple, with a spray of apple blossoms and the letter "A," or currant with a cluster of currants and the letter "C." Sealing wax in several colors simulates shirred ribbon on the center glass which contains marmalade.

PIGS AS FORM OF CURRENCY

Centuries Ago the Animals Were Generally Accepted in England in Payment of Rent.

Quaint though they seem, the rents, customs and services paid to the prince of Wales at Launceston were once common enough all over England, and it would be easy to show many parallels for Lancashire and Cheshire. In the fourteenth century in Cheshire rent in kind was often paid in sparrowhawks, barbed arrowheads, pepper, gloves and especially in pigs.

Arrowheads would be useful, but a large rent roll of the other things might be inconvenient. They were, therefore, sold, and the relative values are interesting. The sparrowhawks were worth about 25 cents, the gloves two cents a pair and the pepper about 20 cents a pound. Pigs, of course, vary in size and weight and must have given rise to controversies between bailiffs and tenants. Some approach to a standard size was doubtless obtained, and the pigs are usually described as "reasonable" or "customary" pigs. Even so, the price the bailiff obtained varied greatly, some selling for 85 cents each and some for 90 cents. Pigs were paid not only by poor tenants for their tiny holdings, but also by families as rich and powerful as the Grosvenors.—Manchester Guardian.
