WORK BEING RUSHED ON M-49

Contractors are very busy on M-49,
the state reward road passing through Pinckney east and west. Three contracts are being rushed to complete the work this fall if possible, as this route between Grand Rapids, Lansing and Detroit will be used next year to accommodate the usual travel on Grand River Road.

It is proposed to pave Grand River road with 20 foot pavement, widen the thoroughfare to 100 feet and bring it up to a first class highway. With one exception Grand River has more traffic than any of the main arteries out of Detroit.

When the present work on M-49 is completed another fine road will be available to Detroit from the west.
This will save 12 miles of travel on the the Detroit route from Pinckney and will be the shortest route from points west of here as far as Stockbridge and Mason.

MYSTERY AND FUN AT THE OPERA HOUSE

Monday night the first entertainment of the Seniors Lyceum course was given at the opera house.

A fairly good attendance was present and all were well pleased with the entertainment Mystery and Fun.

The Seniors should be encouraged in their efforts to provide good entertainment for Pinckney. They assume the risk and deserve great credit for their work in this direction. The following numbers promise to be good, so if you have not yet procured tickets do so now and show your appreciation of the efforts of the class for good entertainments.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our kind friends and neighbors also the minister for his comforting words; the donors of the beautiful flowers; those that donated the use of their automobiles; the choir
for the beautiful music; and all others who assisted in any way in the death and burial of our dear little son and

C. H. KENNEDY

FIFTY YEARS AGO

A young man who practiced medicine in Pennsylvania became famous and was called in consultation in many towns and cities because of his success in the treatment of disease. This was Dr. Pierce, who finally made up his mind to place some of his medicines before the public, and moving to Buffalo, N. Y., put up what he called his "Favorite Prescription," and placed it with the druggists in every state.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has long been recognized as a tonic for diseases peculiar to womanhood. After suffering pain, feeling nervous, dizzy, weak and dragged-down by weaknesses of her sex—a woman is quickly restored to health by its use. Thousands of women testify that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has entirely eradicated their distressing ailments.

More recently that wonderful discovery of Dr. Pierce's, called An-uria (for kidney and backache), has been successfully used by many thousands who write Dr. Pierce of the benefits received—that their backache, rheumatism, and other symptoms of uric acid deposits in joints or muscles have been completely conquered by its use.

Send 10c to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., for trial pkg. of any of his remedies, or write for free medical advice.

A TRUE RAT STORY

Auburntown, Tenn., 6-23-22.
Dear Sir:—I, T. Donnell of Auburntown, Tenn., came to your store the other day and wanted something to kill rats, so I bought your Stearns Rat Paste. And he put some paste on six blouses that night and the next morning he found fifty-four big rats. And the second night he put out four more blouses with paste on them, and the second morning he found seventeen more rats, making a total of seventy-one rats in two nights, and there were lots more that he did not find.

This is some big rat tale, but, nevertheless, it is so. Just thought would write to let you know that your rat paste is good.

Respectfully, KENNEDY BROTHERS

Carving 5,000 Years Old.
What is described as the "finest expression of Egyptian statuary art in the world" has been sold at Sotheby's auction room in London for 10,000 pounds sterling. It is the head of Amenemmes III, an Egyptian king who lived about 3000 B. C. It is cut in obsidian, which is said to be one of the hardest stones on which an artist can work.

It measures 4 1/4 inches from the top of the head to the chin, but Prof. Percy E. Newberry, the Egyptologist, has pronounced it "a masterpiece that has not been surpassed by any sculptor of any country or age."

MOLE IS MARVEL OF ENERGY AND POSSESSES INSATIABLE APPETITE

Tests Show Mole Is Carnivorous Animal.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Perhaps no other animal is relatively so strong, does so much hard work in a day, or eats so much in proportion to its size and weight, as the American mole. A mole's appetite seems to be almost insatiable. When held in captivity and given food to its liking, it will sometimes eat more than its own weight in a day. This need for a large quantity of food is probably due to the intense activity of the little animal, for experiments have shown that it may be found at work at any hour of the day or night, whenever its runways require repairing or it is in need of new sources of food supplies.

From the standpoint of food habits, it would seem that moles are chiefly beneficial or at least neutral. Experiments conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture show that the mole is a carnivorous animal, though vegetable matter is occasionally found in its stomach. An examination of the stomachs of 200 moles showed that earthworms and white grubs form the bulk of the food. Beetles and their larvae and other insects that enter the ground, spiders, centipedes, and cocoons also form a portion. In one stomach were found the remains of 71 small white grubs, in one 250 ant puparia, in one ten cutworms, and in another 12 earthworms. In captivity, moles ravenously eat beefsteak, flesh of birds, fish, or almost any sort of fresh meat, but starve to death when supplied with nothing other than grain and root crops.

The chief damage done by the mole seems to be in tearing up gardens and making unsightly ridges in lawns. Moles have been dealt with in the United States chiefly as a nuisance, but in some European countries they are trapped extensively not only to be rid of them as a pest but also to harvest their pelts. In this country it has been demonstrated that moles are never dormant, that they never hibernate. They may be trapped at any time of the year when the ground is not frozen too hard to permit the working of the trap.

DIFFERENT NAMES IN WHEAT BY-PRODUCTS

Much Confusion Caused by Use of Various Terms.

Shorts and Middlings Are Used Synonymously in Some Sections of Country—Table Shows Styles Used in Many States.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sectional differences in the use of names for by-products of wheat are often confusing, says the United States Department of Agriculture in calling attention to the terms used in the regions growing the three principal types of wheat. The near Northwest, which includes Minnesota, the Dakotas, and parts of adjoining states, grows hard spring wheat; the Southwest, also Nebraska and Kansas, grows hard winter wheat; and the East and states as far west as Missouri and Iowa grow soft winter wheat. Of course, these areas overlap to some extent.

Most of the confusion has been caused by different names for shorts and middlings. In some parts of the country these terms are used synonymously, in others one may be used to the exclusion of the other. Where both are used there seems to be a tendency to apply the term "shorts" to the coarser materials, such as standard middlings; and the term "middlings" to the finer materials, such as red dog flour.

While there often may be considerable differences in the composition of corresponding by-products because of the differences in composition and texture of the wheat and of the slight differences in milling practice, the methods of manufacture in the different milling sections are similar and the following table, read horizontally, shows the names used in the different regions for the same by-product feed:

Northwest.	Southwest.	East.
Brn. standard middlings.	Brn. Brown shorts.	Brn. mid- dings.
Flour mid- dings.	Gray shorts.	Gray mid- dings.
Red Dog.	White shorts.	White mid- dings.
Wheat mixed feed.	Wheat mixed feed.	W h e m i d- dings.

"Shipstuf" is a term that has been used in the past for various wheat by-products. It has no very definite meaning, although it seems to apply only to wheat products.

AVOID UNWHOLESOME LITTER

Specialists at Iowa Station Recommend Covering Floor With Finely Cut Alfalfa.

Not many poultry keepers realize the close relation between the condition of the litter in the fowls' quarters and the health of the birds. Poultry specialists at the Iowa station say that unwholesome litter has been known to cause the death of hens, and they recommend covering the floor with finely cut alfalfa or clover.

CATER TO MARKET DEMANDS

Some Dealers Won't Handle Very Fat Hens, While Others Carefully Avoid Leghorns.

Some buyers won't touch very fat hens; they claim they can't find a sale for them; others don't want to handle Leghorns. It is a good plan to know which way the local wind blows since much of the profit of the small breeder must come from local sales.

SOWS FED BALANCED RATION

Kansas Reports 71 Per Cent More Pigs Raised Than Those Receiving Mostly Corn.

Sows put on balanced rations raised 71 per cent more pigs than those receiving the same management but fed on low protein rations in a "Save the Pig" campaign carried on by extension workers in Kansas last spring. Farrowing records were kept by 53 farmers. According to a report received by the United States Department of Agriculture, 283 sows on 29 farms received corn and a protein supplement of either tankage, skim milk, alfalfa, or linseed-oil meal. These 283 sows farrowed 2,669 pigs, an average of 10 to a litter; of these pigs, 1,713 were weaned, an average of 6.5 pigs per litter. On 11 farms, 166 sows received mostly corn rations, farrowing 1,194 pigs, an average of 7 to the litter; of these pigs, 1,645 were weaned, an average of 8.8 pigs to a litter.

CONTROL CURCULIO BY SPRAY

Good Progress Made in Georgia in Overcoming Infestation—Big Peach Crop Produced.

One of the best peach crops ever produced in Georgia has just been harvested. It is reported to the United States Department of Agriculture. Very good progress was made in overcoming the heavy curculio infestation. All varieties, through to the close of the Elberta season, have been unusually free from curculio larvae. Careful investigations of commercial orchards treated according to the advice of department and state specialists showed that curculio damage was not greater than an average of one wormy peach in each five-eighths bushel basket. In these orchards dropped fruit was picked up and destroyed, and cultivation for the destruction of pupae practiced, in addition to very thorough spraying.

TO DRIVE OUT TUBERCULOSIS

Plan for Eradicating Disease in Cattle From Entire Areas Daily Growing in Popularity.

The plan for eradicating tuberculosis in cattle from entire areas, such as counties, is daily growing in popularity according to reports coming to the United States Department of Agriculture. The idea has taken hold in Michigan and is spreading rapidly. Already five counties have been freed of the plague, and reports from the inspector in charge for the government show that the boards of supervisors have appropriated money and made provision for co-operating with state and federal forces. When one county joins the ranks for eradication its action stimulates others to follow. The prospect of ultimately ridding the country of the disease never looked so promising as at present, say those in charge.

CULLING IS NECESSARY EVIL

Handling of Laying Hens Tends to Check Production of Eggs—Advantages Great.

Culling a flock of chickens necessitates the individual handling of every bird in the flock. While the advantages of culling are great, as indicated by the wide and growing adoption of the practice, it should be clearly recognized that the handling process in itself tends to check the production of hens that are laying. It is a necessary evil to be accomplished with as little discomfort to the hens, as well as with as little labor to culler, as possible.

Wheat Growing, Cattle Raising and a Happy Home of Your Own

Prosperous Farms and Happy Homes await those who are desirous of enlarging their present resources and securing for themselves homes in a country that, while yet in its infancy, has made itself famous by the quality of the grain it produces and by the excellence of its live stock.

There are Millions of Acres of the highest class of soil available for the man whose object in life is to become his own landlord, and who wishes to share in the country which has given us the thousands of Americans who, having started on Western Canada farms with small means, are now writing home to their friends, telling of what they have done. Lands are cheap and homesteads farther from lines of railway are than the seasons. Upon these lands can be grown the best of wheat, oats, barley, flax, grass, hay, better corn and stockfeed.

Cattle winter in most places without shelter; dairying is highly successful. Some only own land, but on progressive farms, perfect climate, on extensive social conditions, good neighbors, excellent schools, churches, hospitals, and many more advantages, are to be found.

ADVISE FRUIT TREE PLANTING IN SPRING

Advantages of Fall Outweighed in Michigan by Danger of Winter Killing

That the safest course for the average Michigan orchardist is to plant his trees in the spring, in order to avoid danger of winter injury from severe cold, is the opinion of the Michigan Agricultural College department of horticulture.

The advantages of fall planting, which are great in certain sections, are more than outweighed in this state by the chances that an unusually severe winter will result in serious injury or even actual killing of the newly planted trees.

The arguments in favor of fall planting are logical enough. There is generally less work to be done on the farm at that season. Conditions in the fall favor good root growth and sound establishment of the trees. In the spring, there is danger of a too heavy drain upon the trees in supporting not only root growth but also the opening leaf buds.

The advantage, then, would seem to rest with the fall planted trees, other things being equal. However, the other things are not always equal, and climatic conditions must be taken into consideration. In some sections fall planting is almost universal, but in others it is just as universally avoided. Where winters are really cold, fall-planted trees are liable to severe damage, while in other zones, generally southerly in location, mild winters make fall planting advisable.

Michigan lies, for the most part, in a sort of neutral zone where some winters are mild enough to that trees planted the previous fall come through nicely. Some Michigan winters, on the other hand, are so cold that even trees set out the previous spring are in danger and fall trees have no chance at all.

Inasmuch as we cannot predict in October what the winter will be like, the safest course is to plant in the spring in Michigan.

FARM BUREAU NOTES

Club Work—Fowlerville Fair

The Boys and Girls club work at the Fowlerville Fair took anything but a small part in making the Fair what it was. The success of this showing was only made possible through the cooperation and keen insight of the directors and their efficient secretary, Mr. Peek. Due to the fact that nearly every club member was at school and the expense of moving everything to the fair was impossible, from the standpoint of the club members, seeing they had already had considerable expense at the Howell Fair, the Fair Association appropriated sufficient money to pay for all the trucking charges and other expense necessary to take care of the stock while on the grounds. The sum of $250.00 was appropriated to be used for prizes. This is considerable more than most fairs have appropriated for this work.

The business men at Fowlerville, who are very much interested in the work, also stepped in and gave it a push. They subscribed $73.00 to be used as special premiums for the club members. The subscriptions vary in amount from $1.00 to $5.00 apiece, and the different amounts will be given in the way of merchandise as far as possible to the winners.

BACK TO TENT-SKIRT DAYS?

Hoop Craze, It is Reliably Reported, Threatens to Engulf Woman-kind Once More.

The jazz skirt is doomed. Those who have refrained from drinking wood alcohol for fear of going blind during the brief skirt epidemic need have no such compunction in the future. A French fashion journal says the hoop skirt will be all the rage within one year, writes Roy K. Moulton in the New York Mail.

The first hoop skirt was designed by Omar the Tentmaker, and the idea was later used by P. T. Barnum to house his congress of freaks and animals. So far as history goes Omar's design was first used as a skirt by the late lamented Queen Elizabeth.

When Queen Liz floated out of Windsor castle to take the air she resembled a full-rigged ship sailing before the wind, with everything working, including the foretop's spinnaker and jibs. She occupied so much territory that she had to speak in a loud tone of voice to be heard by her large circle of admirers. They used to hold the six-day bicycle races around the edge of her skirt.

In those days the woman herself merely acted in the capacity of center pole for the tent she wore and when she was overtaken by a high wind it was customary for her dunkies to stake her gown to the ground around the edges.

There was a lull in the hoop skirt epidemic for some time, and hoop skirts broke out in this country along about the Civil war period. They didn't exactly cause the war, but they may cause one this time.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Saginaw—Kiwamis of Michigan invaded Saginaw for the annual district conference.

Monroe—A $2,000 boat and 42 cases of Canadian beer were seized by Sheriff Gossner at the River Raisin docks. No one was aboard.

Detroit—The management of the Ford Motor Co. is selling coke to employees for $8 a ton, or $8.50 a ton less than is being asked by retailers of the city.

Port Huron—Repairs are being made to the steamer Adriatic which collided with the steamer F. L. Robbins. A fog caused the collision. The Adriatic was damaged considerably.

Lansing—The $35,000 heart balm awarded Monica Hutton in Wayne county circuit court in her breach of promise suit against Arthur Stott, was affirmed here by the state supreme court.

Monroe—Edward W. Hilton, of Erie, Monroe county, for 27 years secretary of the Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance company, of Monroe and Wayne counties, has been elected president of the concern.

Marquette—The legislature will be asked next session to pass an appropriation for a dining-room, hospital and power plant at Marquette prison, the prison board has decided. Present facilities are too small.

Marshall—The county tax rate will not be reduced. Last year it was $3.33 a $1,000 valuation and this year it may exceed this. The county poor fund is already over-drawn. September 30, the overdraft, according to the records in the office of the county treasurer, totalled $14,264.82.

Port Austin—This village will go into court to compel Henry Schlegel to sell the Port Austin Light & Power company plant to the village a bond issue of $10,500, which was the appraised value placed on the plant by the State Industrial Commission, was voted, but Schlegel now wants $11,500.

Ann Arbor—"Control your cars, yourselves and your tempers," advised President M. L. Burton, of the U. of M., speaking here at the first of the public meetings of a safety campaign conducted by the Ann Arbor branch of the Detroit Automobile club. "The greatest friend safety has is courtesy," he said.

Dowagiac—There is considerable agitation in this town concerning the near expiration of the Beckwith company's 30-year lease from Dowagiac to furnish householders with gas and electricity. The present price is 12 cents a kilowatt for electricity and $2 a thousand feet for gas. Taxpayers are uniting to petition for a city owned plant.

Manistiquette—The battle royal for the nomination for treasurer of Schoolcraft county, at the primaries, September 12, will be continued at the general election in November. The nominee, Mrs. Agnes Husband, who won by two votes over Edward Muthaupt and by three over Miss Laura Williams, will be opposed by them on the slip system.

Marquette—Striking shopmen on the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic railroad, a subsidiary of the Soo Line, refused to accept an invitation to return to their jobs as individuals with no impairment of seniority rights. The railroad, it is said, refuses to negotiate with the union and the strikers assail its policy as a move to break the organization.

Battle Creek—That 50 of the 200 Michigan ex-soldiers on the waiting list of the Roosevelt American Legion hospital will be notified that they can receive treatment at the hospital by October 15, was the announcement by E. J. Welch, hospital business manager. Welch announces that the first wing of the big addition will be completed by that date.

Owosso—The enrollment in the Owosso High school at present is 89 greater than a year ago according to Superintendent E. J. William. This is an increase of 20 per cent. The enrollment now is 554, and before the end of the year it will be 600, he says. The building now occupied was built to accommodate 250 pupils, but the voters have twice voted down proposed bond issues to build a new high school.

Hillsdale—Notice has been received by Walter Rawson, director of the agricultural department of Hillsdale high school, that the stock judging team from Hillsdale won first honors at the Western Michigan fair at Grand Rapids. The team consisted of Ford Eagle, Mario Murray and Everett Watkins. The members of the team will have their expenses paid by the Western Michigan Fair society at the international live stock show in Chicago in December.

The bill continues that during the progress of work under these contracts the government paid to the company $31,436,175.11 as payment under the terms and conditions of such contracts and supplements.

Suspension of the debts of France, Italy and other European debtors of the United States for a period of 10 years was recommended by President Alvin K. Krech, of the Equitable Trust company as a means of taking the Allied debt question out of politics for a definite period and creating an atmosphere of judicial aloofness into which the subject might be approached.

PEACE PARLEY STRIKES SNAG

TURKEY DEMANDS PERMISSION TO OCCUPY EASTERN THRACE NOW.

READY TO FIGHT FOR PROVINCE

France Backs Ankara Government While Italian and British Delegates Oppose Pasha's Demands.

London—A new crisis arose in the Near Eastern situation, which had seemed on a fair way to settlement. The armistice conference of Allied, Greek and Turkish military leaders at Mudani was adjourned suddenly after a dramatic passage in which Ismet Pasha, representing the Ankara government, demanded that the Turks be allowed to occupy Eastern Thrace as a precedent to any peace conference.

Ismet Pasha told the Allied generals that if the Turks could not have Thrace peacefully, "we have the means to enforce our determination." Earlier in the day the Greek delegates had declared in no less certain terms their readiness to fight, if necessary, to retain the province.

That the Turkish demand had been duly weighed and calculated is evidenced by the almost simultaneous receipt of an Ankara dispatch quoting Mustafa Kemal Pasha as declaring before the National Assembly:

"The evacuation and surrender of Thrace must occur immediately, especially as since the Greek revolution the Moslem subjects are in great danger."

Ismet Pasha's bombshell was followed by another when the French delegates announced they were instructed to support the Turkish demand. This created a definite split, with the Turks and French opposed to the British and Italians, the latter holding that evacuation of Thrace by the Greeks and reoccupation by the Turks should follow and not precede the peace conference.

The Allied generals thereupon adjourned the meeting and left for Constantinople to consult with the high commissioners and the British and Italians to ask definite instructions from their home governments, with the understanding that a further meeting would follow their receipt.

TO BAN LIQUOR ON U. S. SHIPS

And Now Government Must Find Work for Bartenders.

Washington—President Harding has another unemployment problem before him now. Word has drifted into headquarters of the anti-alcohol league that shipping board vessels will have their bars closed shortly through orders from Attorney General Daugherty and Chairman A. D. Lasker.

The bartenders will be without jobs, and as the shipping board announced informally at one time that the bartenders were appointed because of efficiency and in disregard to politics, the argument is made that the Harding administration should care for them in some manner.

"Put your bundle on the seat," said his friend.

"Oh, no," Pat answered. "Since you are so good as to give me a ride, O'll not be after asking you to carry me bundle as well!"

THE INDIAN DRUM

By William MacHarg and Edwin Balmer

Copyright by Edwin Balmer

CHAPTER XVIII—Continued.

The door opened then a very little, and the frightened face of an Indian woman appeared in the crack. The woman evidently had expected—and feared—some arrival, and was reassured when she saw only a girl. She threw the door wider open, and bent to help unfasten Constance's snowshoes; having done that, she led her in and closed the door.

"Where is your man?" Constance had caught the woman's arm.

"They sent him to the beach. A ship has sunk."

"Are there houses near here? You must run to one of them at once. Bring whoever you can get; or if you won't do that, tell me where to go."

The woman stared at her stolidly and moved away. "None near," she said. "Besides, you could not get anybody before some one will come."

"Who is that?"

"He is on the beach—Henry Spearman. He comes here to warm himself. It is nearly time he comes again."

Constance gazed at her; the woman was plainly glad of her coming. Her relief—relief from that fear she had been feeling when she opened the door—was very evident. It was Henry, then, who had frightened her.

The Indian woman set a chair for her beside the stove, and put water in a pan to heat; she shook tea leaves from a box into a bowl and brought a cup.

"How many on that ship?"

"Altogether there were thirty-nine," Constance replied.

"Seven are living then?"

"Seven? What have you heard? What makes you think so?"

"That is what the Drum says."

The Drum! There was a Drum then! At least there was some sound which people heard and which they called the Drum. For the woman had heard it.

Constance grew suddenly cold. For twenty lives, the woman said, the Drum had beat; that meant to her, and to Constance too now, that seven were left. Indefinite, desperate denial that all from the ferry must be dead—that denial which had been strengthened by the news that at least one boat had been adrift near Beaver—altered in Constance to conviction of a boat with seven men from the ferry, seven dying, perhaps, but not yet dead. Seven out of twenty-seven; the score were gone; the Drum had beat for them in little groups as they died. When the Drum beat again, would it beat beyond the score?

Having finished the tea, Constance returned to the door and reopened it; the sounds outside were the same. A solitary figure appeared moving along the edge of the ice—the figure of a tall man, walking on snowshoes; moonlight distorted the figure, and it was muffled, too, in a great coat which made it unrecognizable. He halted and stood looking out at the lake and then, with a sudden movement, strode on; he halted again, and now Constance got the knowledge that he was not looking; he was listening as she was.

"Is the Drum sounding now?" she asked the woman.

"No."

Constance gazed again at the man and found his motion quite unmistakable; he was counting—if not counting something that he heard, or thought he heard, he was recounting and reviewing within himself something that he had heard before—some irregular rhythm which had become so much a part of him that it sounded now continually within his own brain; so that, instinctively, he moved in cadence to it. He stepped forward again now, and turned toward the house.

Her breath caught as she spoke to the woman. "Mr. Spearman is coming here now!"

Her impulse was to remain where she was, lest he should think she was afraid of him; but realization came to her that there might be advantage in seeing him before he knew that she was there, so she unlocked the door and drew back into the cabin.

CHAPTER XIX

The Sounding of the Drum. Noises of the wind and the roaring of the lake made inaudible any sound of his approach to the cabin; she heard his snowshoes, however, scrape the cabin wall as, after taking them off, he leaned them beside the door. He thrust the door open then and came in; he did not see her at first and, as he turned to force the door shut again against the wind she watched him quietly.

He saw her now and started and, as though slight of her confused him, he looked from the woman and then back to Constance before he seemed certain of her.

"Hello!" he said tentatively. "Hello!"

"Oh, you are! You are!" He stood drawn up, swaying a little as he stared at her; whisky was upon his breath, and it became evident in the heat of the room; but whisky could not account for this condition she witnessed in him. Neither could it conceal that condition; some turmoil and strain within him made him immune to its effects.

She had realized on her way up here what, vaguely, that strain within him must be. Guilt—guilt of some awful sort connected him, and had connected Uncle Benny, with the Miwaka—the lost ship for which the Drum had beaten the roll of the dead. Guilt was in his thought now—racking, tearing at him. But there was something more than that; what she had seen in him when he first caught sight of her was fear—fear of her, of Constance Sherrill.

"You came up here about Ben Corvet?" he challenged.

"Yes—no!"

"Which do you mean?"

"No."

"I know, then. For him, then—eh? For him?"

"For Alan Conrad? Yes," she said.

"I knew it!" he repeated. "He's been the trouble between you and me all the time!"

She made no denial of that; she had begun to know during the last two days that it was so.

"So you came to find him?" Henry went on.

"He'll be found!" she defied him.

"Be found?"

"Some are dead," she admitted, "but not all. Twenty are dead; but seven are not!"

"Seven?" he echoed. "You say seven are not! How do you know?"

"The Drum has been beating for twenty, but not for more!" Constance said. "The Drum you've been listening to all day upon the beach—the Indian Drum that sounded for the dead of the Miwaka; sounded, one by one, for all who died! But it didn't sound for him! It's been sounding again, you know; but, again, it doesn't sound for him, Henry, not for him!"

"The Miwaka! What do you mean by that? What's that got to do with this?" His swollen face was thrust forward at her; there was threat against her in his tense muscles and his bloodshot eyes.

She did not shrink back from him, or move; and now he was not waiting for her answer. Something—a sound—had caught him about. Once it echoed, low in its reverberation but penetrating and quite distinct. It came, so far as direction could be assigned to it, from the trees toward the shore; but it was like no forest sound. Distinct, too, was it from any noise of the lake. It was like a Drum! Yet, when the echo had gone, it was a sensation easy to deny—a hallucination, that was all. But now, low and distinct it came again; and, as before, Constance saw it catch Henry and hold him. His lips moved, but he did not speak; he was counting. "Two," she saw his lips form.

The sound of the Drum was continuing, the beats a few seconds apart. "Twelve," Constance counted to herself. The beats had seemed to be quite measured and regular at first; but now Constance knew that this was only roughly true; they beat rather in rhythm than at regular intervals. "Twenty—twenty-one—twenty-two!"

Guilt Was in His Thought Now—Racking, Tearing at Him.

Constance caught breath and waited for the next beat; the time of the interval between the measures of the rhythm passed, and still only the whistle of the wind and the undertone of water sounded. The Drum had beaten its roll and, for the moment, was done.

Twenty-two had been her count, as nearly as she could count at all; the reckoning agreed with what the Indian woman had heard. Two had died, then, since the Drum last had beat, when its roll was twenty. Two more than before; that meant five were left! Constance caught up her woolen hood from the table and put it on. Her action seemed to call Henry to himself.

"What are you going to do?" he demanded.

"I'm going out."

He moved between her and the door.

"Not alone, you're not!" His heavy voice had a deep tone of menace in it; he seemed to consider and decide something about her. "There's a farmhouse about a mile back; I'm going to take you over there and leave you with those people."

"I will not go there!"

He swore. "I'll carry you, then!"

She shrank back from him as he lurched toward her with hands outstretched to seize her; he followed her, and she avoided him again; if his guilt and terror had given her mental ascendancy over him, his physical strength could still force her to his will and, realizing the impossibility of evading him or overcoming him, she stopped.

"Not that!" she cried. "Don't touch me!"

"Come with me, then!" he commanded; and he went to the door and laid his snowshoes on the snow and stepped into them, stooping and tightening the straps; he stood by while she put on hers. He did not attempt again to put hands upon her as they moved away from the little cabin toward the woods back of the clearing; but went ahead, breaking the trail for her with his snowshoes. He moved forward slowly; he could travel, if he had wished, three feet to every two that she could cover, but he seemed not wishing for speed but rather for delay. A deep, dull resonance was booming above the wood; it boomed again and ran into a rhythm. No longer was it above; at least it was not only above, it was all about them—here, there, to right and to left, before, behind—the booming of the Drum. Doom was the substance of that sound of the Drum beating the roll of the dead.

Henry had stopped in front of her, half turned away; his body swayed and bent to the booming of the Drum, as his swollen lips counted its soundings. She could see him plainly in the moonlight, yet she drew nearer to him as she followed his count. "Twenty-one," he counted—"Twenty-two!" The drum was still going on. "Twenty-four—twenty-five—twenty-six!" Would he count another?

He did not; and her pulses, which had halted, leaped with relief. He moved on again, descending the steep side of a little ravine, and she followed. One of his snowshoes caught in a protruding root and, instead of slowing to free it with care, he pulled it violently out, and she heard the dry, seasoned wood crack. He looked down, swore; saw that the wood was not broken through and went on; but as he reached the bottom of the slope, she leaped downward from a little height behind him and crashed down upon his trailing snowshoe just behind the heel. The rending snap of the wood came beneath his feet. Had she broken through his shoe or snapped her own?

She sprang back, as he cried out and swung in an attempt to grasp her; he lunged to follow her, and she ran a few steps away and stopped. At his next step his foot entangled in the mesh of the broken snowshoe, and he stooped, cursing, to strip it off and hurl it from him; then he tore off the one from the other foot, and threw it away, and lurched after her again; but now he sank above his knees and floundered in the snow. She stood for a moment while the half-mad, half-drunken figure struggled toward her along the side of the ravine; then she ran to where the tree-trunks hid her from him. He gained the top of the slope and turned in the direction she had gone; assured then, apparently, that she had flown in fear of him, he started back more swiftly toward the beach. She followed, keeping out of his sight among the trees.

To twenty-six, he had counted—to twenty-six, each time! That told that he knew one was living among those who had been upon the ferry! What one? It could only be one of two to dismay him so; there had been only two on the ferry whose rescue he had feared; only two who, living, he would have let lie upon this beach which he had chosen and set aside for his patrol, while he waited for him to die!

She forced herself on, unsparringly, as she saw Henry gain the shore and, believing himself alone, he hurried northward. She could not rest; she could not let herself be exhausted. Merciless minute after minute she raced him thus—A dark shape—a figure lay stretched upon the ice ahead! Beyond and still farther out, something which seemed the fragments of a lifeboat tossed up and down where the waves thundered and gleamed at the edge of the ice.

Henry's pace quickened; he quickened desperately, too. She left the shelter of the trees and scrambled down the steep pitch of the bluff, shouting, crying aloud. Henry turned about and saw her; he halted, and she passed him with a rush and got between him and the form upon the ice, before she turned and faced him.

Defeat—defeat of whatever purpose he had had—was his now that she was there to witness what he might do; and in his realization of that, he burst out in oaths against her. He advanced; she stood, confronting—he swayed slightly in his walk and swung past her and away; he went past those things on the beach and kept on along the ice hump—she toward the north.

She ran to the huddled figure of the man in mackinaw and cap; his face was hidden partly by the position in which he lay and partly by the drifting snow; but, before she swept the snow away and turned him to her, she knew that he was Alan.

She cried to him and, when he did not answer, she shook him to get him awake; but she could not rouse him. Praying in wild whispers to herself, she opened his jacket and felt within his clothes; he was warm—at least he was not frozen within! No; and there seemed some stir of his heart! She tried to lift him, to carry him; then to drag him. But she could not; he fell from her arms into the snow again, and she sat down, pulling him upon her lap and clasping him to her.

She must have aid, she must get him to some house, she must take him out of the terrible cold; but dared she leave him? Might Henry return, if she went away? She arose and looked about. Far up the shore she saw his figure rising and falling with his flight over the rough ice. A sound came to her, too, the low, deep reverberation of the Drum beating once more along the shore and in the woods and out upon the lake; and it seemed to her that Henry's figure, in the stumbling steps of his flight, was keeping time to the wild rhythm of that sound. And she stooped to Alan and covered him with her coat, before leaving him; for she feared no longer Henry's return.

CHAPTER XX

The Fate of the Miwaka.

"So this isn't your house, Judah?"

"No, Alan; this is an Indian's house, but it is not mine. It is Adam Enow's house. He and his wife went—same where else when you needed this."

"He helped to bring me here, then?"

"No, Alan. They were alone, here—she and Adam's wife. When she found you, they brought you here—more than a mile along the beach. Two women!"

Alan choked as he put down the little porcupine quill box which had started this line of inquiry. Whatever questions he had asked Judah or Sherrill these last few days had brought him very quickly back to her. Moved by some intuitive certainty regarding Spearman, she had come north; she had not thought of peril to herself; she had struggled alone across dangerous ice in storm—a girl brought up as she had been! She had found him—Alan—with life almost extinct—upon the beach; she and the Indian woman, Wassaquam had just said—had brought him along the shore. How had they managed that, he wondered. His throat closed up, and his eyes filled as he thought of this.

In the week during which he had been cared for here, Alan had not seen Constance; but there had been a peculiar and exciting alteration in Sherrill's manner toward him, he had felt; it was something more than merely liking for him that Sherrill had showed, and Sherrill had spoken of her to him as Constance, not, as he had called her always before, "Miss Sherrill," or "my daughter." Alan had had dreams which had seemed impossible of fulfillment, of dedicating his life and all that he could make of it to her; now Sherrill's manner had brought to him something like awe, as of something quite incredible.

He turned to the Indian.

"Has anything more been heard of Spearman, Judah?"

"Only this, Alan; he crossed the straits the next day upon the ferry there. In Mackinaw City he bought liquor at a bar and took it with him; he asked there about trains into the northwest. He has gone, leaving all he had. What else could he do?"

Alan crossed the little cabin and looked out the window over the snow-covered slope, where the bright sun was shining. Snow had covered any tracks that there had been upon the beach where those who had been in the boat with him had been found dead. He had known that this must be; he had believed them beyond aid when he had tried for the shore to summon help for them and for himself. The other boat, which had carried survivors of the wreck, blown farther to the south, had been able to gain the shore of North Fox Island; and as these men had not been so long exposed before they were brought to shelter, four men lived. Sherrill had told him their names; they were the mate, the assistant engineer, a deck-hand and Father Perron, the priest who had been a passenger but who had stayed with the crew till the last. Benjamin Corvet had perished in the wreckage of the cars.

As Alan went back to his chair, the Indian watched him and seemed not displeased.

"You feel good, now, Alan?" Wassaquam asked.

"Almost like myself, Judah."

"That is right, then. It was thought you would be like that today. A sled is coming soon, now."

"We're going to leave here, Judah?"

"Yes, Alan."

Was he going to see her, then? Excitement stirred him, and he turned to Wassaquam to ask that; but suddenly he hesitated and did not inquire.

Wassaquam brought the mackinaw and cap which Alan had worn on Number 25; he took from the bed the new blankets which had been furnished by Sherrill. They waited until a farmer appeared driving a team hitched to a low, wide-runnner sled. The Indian settled Alan on the sled, and they drove off.

They traveled south along the shore, rounded into Little Traverse bay, and the houses of Harbor Point appeared among their pines. The sled proceeded across the edge of the bay to the little city; even before leaving the bay ice, Alan saw Constance and her father; they were walking at the water front near the railway station, and they came out on the ice as they recognized the occupants of the sled.

Alan felt himself alternately weak and roused to strength as he saw her. Their eyes encountered, and hers looked away; a sudden shyness, which sent his heart leaping, had come over her. He wanted to speak to her, to make some recognition to her of what she had done, but he did not dare to trust his voice; and she seemed to understand that. He turned to Sherrill instead. An engine and tender coupled to a single car stood at the railway station.

"We're going to Chicago?" he inquired of Sherrill.

"Not yet, Alan—to St. Ignace. Father Perron—the priest, you know—went to St. Ignace as soon as he recovered from his exposure. He sent word to me that he wished to see me at my convenience; I told him that we would go to him as soon as you were able."

"He sent no other word than that?"

"Only that he had a very grave communication to make to us."

Alan did not ask more; at mention of Father Perron he had seemed to feel himself once more among the crashing, charging freight cars on the ferry and to see Benjamin Corvet, pinned amid the wreckage and speaking into the ear of the priest.

It was not merely a confessional which Father Perron had taken from the lips of the dying man on Number 25; it was an accusation of crime against another man as well; and the confessional and accusation both had been made, not only to gain forgiveness from God, but to right terrible wrongs. If the confession left some things unexplained, it did not lack confirmation; the priest had learned enough to be certain that it was no hallucination of madness. He had been charged definitely to repeat what had been told him to the persons he was now going to meet; so he watched expectantly upon the railway station platform at St. Ignace. A tall, handsome man whom Father Perron thought must be the Mr. Sherrill with whom he had communicated appeared upon the car platform; the young man from Number 25 followed him, and the two helped down a young and beautiful girl.

They recognized the priest by his dress and came toward him at once.

"Mr. Sherrill!" Father Perron inquired.

Sherrill assented, taking the priest's hand and introducing his daughter.

"I am glad to see you safe, Mr. Stafford." The priest had turned to Alan.

"We have thanks to offer up for that, you and I!"

"I am his son, then! I thought that must be so."

Alan trembled at the priest's sign of confirmation. There was no shock of surprise in this; he had suspected ever since August, when Captain Stafford's watch and the wedding ring had so strangely come to Constance, that he might be Stafford's son. He looked at Constance, as they followed the priest to the motor which was waiting to take them to the house of old Father Benoit, whose guest Father Perron was; she was very quiet. What would that grave statement which Father Perron was to make to them mean to him—to Alan? Would further knowledge about that father whom he had not known, but whose blood was his and whose name he now must bear, bring pride or shame to him?

A bell was tolling somewhere, as they followed the priest into Father Benoit's small bare room which had been prepared for their interview. Father Perron went to a desk and took therefrom some notes which he had made.

"What I have," he said, speaking more particularly to Sherrill, "is the terrible, not fully coherent statement of a dying man. It has given me names—also it has given me facts. But isolated. It does not give what came before or what came after; therefore, it does not make plain. I hope that, as Benjamin Corvet's partner, you can furnish what I lack."

Tobacco Legends.

According to one fantastic legend Adam got so bored with Eve that he asked God to send him a consolation, and God sent tobacco. The other story relates that our First Mother got so "fed up" with her husband's attentions that she prayed God to send him some other distraction, and the heavenly gift of tobacco answered her prayer.—Montreal Family Herald

Robbery.

An old man was walking along a road one night, when he was confronted by a burly stranger.

"What do you want?" he asked.

"We're going to have a game of put and take, mate," replied the stranger.

"Put and take?" gasped the old man, shivering with fright.

DOUBTS THE PRACTICABILITY

opinion of the plan, tried out recently on the Monongahela river with a definite degree of success, said the area was small and that the formation of a fog was easily averted.

"It would take a large number of men and boats and an immense supply of oil to prevent a fog arising from the Ohio river," said Mr. Devereaux. "I don't think the men could work fast enough to beat the union of the air with the water. They could try floating the oil with the current, but it would not move fast enough."

Spreading oil, mixed with an organic acid, just before the cold air and the warm water meet to form a fog, was the process explained. The oil prevents the cold air from meeting the water.—Detroit Free Press.

Mr. Devereaux was formerly well known here, having lived here as a boy and man until accepting a position with the weather bureau. The many friends of the Devereaux family will be pleased to learn that he has become prominent in his profession.

WARRING ON THEATER COUGH

Here Are Some Suggestions That May Aid in Doing Away With Annoying Disturbances.

Cough, and the house coughs, with you, has long been a maxim of the theater. It is contagion in its quickest form. Actors are now in arms against it, claiming that most theater coughing is mere habit and could be controlled. What good the actors' protest will do remains to be seen, but the outlook for a coughless theater is not wholly hopeless. People no longer sneeze like a set piece of Paine's fireworks, and they may in time learn to refine the cough.

Of course, coughing has its uses. Discreet employment of it by an adult may keep a child companion from hearing an improper line in a farce, but this process is wearing. It necessitates advance knowledge of the dialogue, and a larynx of iron. Best of all methods of regulating the theater cough would be by means of a cough indicator, one attached to each chair. By a delicate mechanism on the seismograph principle—the principle by which earthquakes are recorded—each cough of any magnitude would be rung up like car fare. Each patron would be entitled during an evening to so many—say, ten. At the eleventh, patron would vanish through a trapdoor in the floor to a first-aid station in the basement, where throat specialist with sprays would be in constant attendance.

"It's sweet to hear the watchdog's honest bark," wrote Byron. The watchdog's, yes—Arthur H. Folwell in Leslie's Weekly.

SAFETY IN FINGER PRINTS

Chicago Post Office Authorities Are to Use Them When Savings Accounts Are Opened.

Finger-print impressions must now be taken of every person desiring to open a postal savings account, at both the main post office and the stations. The print of the first or index finger on each hand must be taken. This is done so that in the event of injury to the right hand, making it impossible to take the finger print in making a withdrawal, the identification may be established by the first finger of the left hand.

"The purpose of the finger-print impression is for the protection of the depositor and the post office," said Postmaster Arthur C. Lender of Chicago. "We are particularly anxious that it shall not be associated with finger printing by the police department. While test questions ordinarily are sufficient to identify the depositor, cases have arisen in which near relatives or acquaintances have answered the test questions to the satisfaction of the paying postmaster or clerk, and thereby secured deposits illegally. Then, too, many of our foreign-born depositors in the progress of their Americanization attend the schools and show such improvement in their writing that their signatures materially change. Finger prints in such cases save the depositor the possibility of delay in withdrawing his funds."
