Two nominating committees headed by E. C. Mandenburg, class of '15, and R. S. Linton, class of '16, reported McKinnon their unanimous choice for president. Both recommended R. Bruce McPherson, '90, of Howell, for re-election as treasurer. One committee has nominated W. C. Geagley of Lansing for vice president, succeeding G. Verne Branch of Detroit, and the other Branch for re-election.

Ionia Boy Is Proud Of Hoover Letter

Wayne Voyzey, Ionia lad of 9, is about as proud as a lad of his size and age should be, the mail man having delivered to him a real letter directed from the White House at Washington.

Wayne's birthday anniversary was on inauguration day and through his mother he is a descendant of Laura S. Harland, in whose memory a monument was erected in Adrian as a public testimonial for her work during the Civil war. Mrs. Harland was a Quaker, as is Herbert Hoover, and Wayne wrote the president a letter of congratulations. The letter just received by him is a reply.

Poems That Live

THE TURN OF THE ROAD
Soft, gray buds on the willow,
Warm, moist winds from the bay,
Sea-gulls out on the sandy beach
And a road my eager feet would reach,
That leads to the Far-away.

Dust on the wayside flower,
The meadow-lark's luring tone,
Is silent now, from the grasses tipped
With dew at the dawn, the pearls
Have slipped—
Far have I fared alone.

And then by the alder thicket,
The turn of the road—and you!
Though the earth lie white in the
noontday heat,
Or the swift storm follow our hurrying feet
What do we care—we two!

Y. W. C. A. Officers Meet

Executives and presidents of the Young Women's Christian Association from eleven cities, representing Philadelphia, New York, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis and Cleveland, met in Cleveland recently to confer on problems of city life. They found that the modern city is a hodge-podge of racial, religious, economic and other groups, and that the Y. W. C. A. is a cross section of the metropolis whose function it is to integrate the various groups. Mrs. Robert E. Spear, Lakeville, Conn., national president, right, above, was one of the speakers. Miss Esther B. Hawes, upper left, Pittsburgh, acted as chairman of the program committee of the conference; Miss Margaret Williamson, New York, lower left, secretary of the national board of the business and professional women; Miss Emma P. Hirth, New York, associate general secretary of the national board, and Miss Mary Sims, New York, national city secretary of the Y., were among the speakers.

Fame of Mt. Clemens As Flower City Upheld

Upholding the record of Mt. Clemens as a flower city, local florists carried away many prizes during the North American Flower show held in Detroit.

The Weaver Rose Gardens took nine first prizes on its display of various types of roses and also obtained several second prizes. It also had the distinction of displaying the largest number of roses in one group in the history of any floral show. There were 3,500 roses in one display. Another Weaver group had 2,000 roses in it. Rock Garden Greenhouses earned off firsts on its display of lilies, red Spectrum carnations and Laddie carnations.

Second places on his display of seven-foot and 42 to 48-inch Premier roses were won by Carey, the Florist. Moderson's exhibit of white Perfection carnations brought first prize, as did a special display of stocks. Second place was won on a wreath of stocks in 12 colors.

Joseph Taylor, featuring sweet peas, took first on rose sweet peas and second on lavender and orange ones.

With a display of 500 snapdragon show blooms, Breitmeyer's provided one of the big hits of the show. In their three contest exhibits, firsts were won on 12 spikes of snapdragons and on a carnation novelty. Second place was won on a basket arrangement of carnations.

Clinton View Greenhouses took seven firsts and two seconds. First place went to Butterfly roses, 25 Premier roses, 25 or 50 Briarcliff roses, display of palmetto, stocks and lilies. Seconds were on 50 Premier roses and 25 Mrs. F. R. Pearson roses.

Work Is Started on New Ferris Institute Building

The Sheldon Construction Co. of Detroit, which has the contract for the new Ferris institute building, has sent men to Big Rapids to start work. The debris and remaining parts of the music hall left standing after the fire last summer have been cleared away.

Officials of the company stated they would endeavor to employ all local labor possible.

"To him that hath shall be given"—the experience of losing.

Summer Collections for 1929

WHAT HOURLY VALUE MAY BE PLACED UPON HOMEMAKER'S TIME?

The modern homemaker knows that by doing her own housework she can save money for the family. All tasks, however, do not bring her an equal return for her labor. With some of them she has no choice; they must be done in the home, and she herself must do them. Others she does because she prefers her own product, or because she is obliged to be in the house during certain hours. But if she is debating whether or not to spend time on one job rather than another, she could make a wiser choice if she knew how much money she saved by doing each and how much time it took to make this saving.

She must then estimate what she would have spent had she bought a commercial substitute of a similar type and quality, or hired a domestic worker whose results are about as good as her own. From the amount of money saved and the amount of time used she can calculate what she is worth per hour in this particular task.

The speed at which she works makes a difference in the value of her time per hour. In general she can expect to find a lower money value for her time when the use of machinery has cut factory-labor cost to a minimum, as is ready-made cotton house dresses, which she can buy in good-enough quality for but little more than she would pay at retail for materials. Time would be better expended on work that saved a larger amount. For example, piecework commercial laundering requires much ironing by hand; the housewife receives a good return on her labor by doing this work herself. Again, ready-made silk dresses are partly hand-finished, and if a woman sews nicely it may pay her to make such dresses at home and save this labor cost.

Perhaps the greatest benefit of a study of the dollars and cents value of the homemaker's time is a fuller appreciation of her contribution to the family finances.

YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN WHO THINK CLEARLY THE GREATEST DEMAND OF AMERICAN BUSINESS

Bankers Association President Gives the Five Essentials of Sound Thinking in Business—Greater Opportunity Than Ever Before for Young People With Educational Training and Power to Analyze Problems.

By CRAIG B. HAZLEWOOD
President American Bankers Association

ONLY half a century ago Michael Pupin, a shepherd boy, guarded his flocks by night among the fields of Serbia. Thieves often lurked in the bordering cornfields awaiting an opportunity to make off with a part of the herd. Serbian boys were taught a method of signalling one another for warning and help. Each carried a knife with a long wooden handle which he would thrust deep into the ground and in case cattle thieves approached he would strike the wooden handle. The sound would be transmitted through the ground to other boys some distance away who could hear and interpret the message.

"Why is it," Pupin asked his mother, "that we can signal this way? Why is it the sound can be heard through the ground, but not through the air? Why is it the signals can be heard in the pasture land so much better than in the plowed fields?" The boy's mother could not answer his questions, nor could the village teacher. However, having an eager mind and great determination, the boy decided to go to America, where he might win an education and find out the answers to these and other perplexing questions.

Hundreds of other boys under the same circumstances and with the same set of conditions merely accepted these things without once questioning them just because they had always done them that way.

The Land of Education and Success

So a penniless immigrant boy from Serbia at the age of fifteen landed in New York in 1874 and, years later, having worked his way through Columbia University, concentrated the wonder and simplicity of his mind upon the problem of sound, which had puzzled him as a shepherd boy. The results of his thinking—what he has accomplished for the long distance telephone and for radio communication by his inventions—are known the world over. "If during the past twenty-two years this company had been compelled to do without one invention of Michael Pupin," an official of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company once said, "and yet give the same service it is giving today it would have had to spend at least $100,000,000 more than it has expended."

These inventions, in which millions of dollars of capital have been invested, were the result of the thinking of a mere country lad who had the simplicity to wonder, the determination to know and the power to apply what he learned.

Stimulating the imagination and thinking is the greatest purpose of education. What American business needs more than anything else is young men and women to think—individuals who are not mentally anchored to tradition, who do not merely appropriate other people's ideas, but who are hard, purposeful thinkers, independent and unprejudiced, with the ability to concentrate and strike straight for the heart of a problem.

Business Needs Folk Who Think

America has astounded the world by its readiness in casting aside traditional viewpoints, disregarding traditional difficulties and pioneering new shortcuts formulas in the realm of business. Business is undergoing special changes.

Business problems are crowding in upon us so rapidly that the executive knows not where to look for adequate help or relief. With the enormous increase in size and intricacy of business affairs the problems have become so complicated and the mass of information necessary to their solution so great that the "days are not long enough." The demand for managerial and executive ability is rushing ahead—the opportunity for young men and women who have the professional training and who develop genuine thinking power is greater than ever.

All business feels the same crying need for the men who see clearly and think conclusively. Wherever we look—manufacturing, wholesaling, retailing, banking, financing—new forces are at work. Vast movements are under way and executives are seeking light upon perplexing problems daily.

Let us consider briefly the five essentials of a sound thinker. If I were looking for a young man of exceptional promise I should hope, first, to find in him the simplicity to wonder. Every great advancement in business has been made by men who dared to wonder, who had the courage to inquire into present procedure and who had the audacity to ask whether something that had been done a certain way for a long time might not be wrong. Although the history of America's progress from its very discovery to the present time has shown the value of an inquiring mind, there is still an inevitable tendency in most men to accept in a docile manner the opinions, methods, supposed facts, procedures and processes of the past. With due reverence to the effort, the spirit, the accomplishments of the past, let us make it our rule that everything be looked at with the clear questioning mind of the scientist.

LEGISLATURE NEWS

Michigan's legislature developed more speed and produced more actual results, in its 14th week of existence than in any week previous. At the close of the week, leaders in the house and the senate were generally agreed that the present session would end during first week in May, because of the progress being made in solution of financial measures.

Perhaps the most sudden development in the legislature, so far as finance matters are concerned, was the passage in the house of representatives, of the state income tax bill introduced by Rep. Wilbur Snow, of Kalamazoo. This measure was rushed through the lower house, late Thursday afternoon, by a vote of 54 to 37, and sent to a mildly puzzled senate, which was all set to receive the Hartmill tax measure the latter part of last week, as the best and neatest solution of the problem of raising money for institutional buildings.

The Snow income tax measure would provide for a 2 per cent annual tax with the following exemptions: single persons, $500; heads of families, $1,000 and $400 exemption for each dependent under 18 years of age. The bill permits deductions for property tax payments either to the state or local governments, and also exempts dividends from stock shares.

The revenue to be raised by the Snow tax measure, if that the eight-tenths mill taxation plan, backed by Rep. Gus T. Hartman, of Houghton, will be pushed along, ready for favorable consideration as the backbone of resource for the state institutional building program in the end. Gov. Fred W. Green recommended a state income tax of 5 per cent in his address to the legislature Jan. 2.

Among the other notable achievements of Michigan's 132 lawmakers during the past week was the reporting out, in the senate, Friday morning, of the administration appropriation measure, released by the finance committees of the two houses after many weeks of joint meetings to consider the provisions of the measure. The appropriation bill is designed to spread a property tax of $20,000,000 annually, for the next two years, unless some of this burden is relieved by some special taxation plan, such as for instance, the Snow income tax measure. In addition to the tax clause appropriations, there are non-tax clause appropriations totaling about $14,000,000. Non-tax clause appropriations are those which are taken care of if and when there is any cash surplus in the general fund.

Early in the week, Gov. Green signed and put into effect, the Watson bill, which carries amendments to the criminal code, so framed as to exempt fourth offense violators of some 120 felonies from the life imprisonment provisions of this code. Among the violations so excepted are violations of the state's liquor law, which, of course, injected the bitter wet-dry aspect to every consideration of the Watson measure. Fourth offense involving liquor, or any of the other 120 odd lesser felonies will now bring a term from 7 1/2 to 15 years.

In the meantime, drys were temporarily checkmated by the fate of the Cuthertson-Miner liquor bill which went to conference following a tangle between the house and senate over its several provisions. The important feature of the measure is that no liquor law violators could get life terms for fourth offense, but there are mandatory penalties for first offenders, even home brewers. The committee representing the house, more moist than dry, will meet with an ultra-dry senate committee appointed by Lt. Gov. Luren D. Dickinson, of Charlotte. The two committees are from the house: Representatives G. C. Watson, Capac, chairman of the house judiciary committee; Gus T. Hartman, Houghton; and Charles H. Reed, Genesee county, while from the senate the conferees are Senators Leonard F. Miner, Owosso; George M. Condon, Detroit, chairman of the senate judiciary committee, and Albert J. Engel, Lake City, chairman of the prohibition committee.

The prediction was freely made that these committees could never agree, and that the Cuthertson bill is now dead.

Michigan broke onto the front pages of the nation's newspaper last Wednesday and Thursday through the instrumentality of Sen. Cass J. Jankowski, of Detroit, who introduced a joint resolution in the senate Wednesday afternoon, calling for a state-wide referendum on the prohibition law. The measure was referred to the senate committee on prohibition, headed by Sen. Albert J. Engel.

The resolution was regarded in some circles as a mere gesture, but there seemed a possibility, late in the week that the resolution might be allowed to come out on the floor of the senate for consideration by that body. The voters of the state would ballot on the question, as did Wisconsin voters last Tuesday (with discouraging results for the drys), at the general election of November, 1930.

Rep. Robert Wardell, Detroit, arch-enemy of the Michigan Anti-Saloon league, was only slightly behind Senator Jankowski in introducing in the house a resolution to submit to the people at the same general election the matter of state control of liquor for home use only.

The house of representatives also aided in keeping the governor on the alert last week by adopting a resolution placing that body on record as favoring the commutation to terms of from 7 1/2 to 15 years, the life imprisonment sentences now being served four time liquor law violators.

Sale of the Chelsea cement plant, for $750,000, is provided for in a bill introduced by Sen. Ari H. Woodruff, of Wyandotte, whose measure was offered shortly after Gov. Green had suggested to the legislature that they devise some means of realizing the state's investment on what has apparently turned out to be a "white elephant". The funds would go to the institutional building fund, thus to lighten the property tax slightly, by the provisions of the Woodruff bill.

One of the most outspoken advocates of the proposition to lighten the tax on the real estate of Michigan is Sen. Peter B. Lennon of Genesee county. Last week Sen. Lennon must have swallowed hard to down a bitter pill when his tobacco tax measure, designed to raise from $5,000,000 to $8,000,000, was turned down by the taxation committee which reported out a substitute measure which would raise about $2,500,000 by a tax of one dollar per thousand cigarettes. Sen. Len on had contemplated a tax of 5 per cent on all other forms of tobacco. The collection of the tobacco tax under the new bill, now on the senate, would be by imposition of stamp on each package of cigarettes sold in state. The tax of one dollar a thousand would mean a tax of 2 cents on each package of 20 cigarettes.

The first meeting of the partially new conservation commission was held in Lansing last Friday, following the appointment of Edward Voght, Escanaba to the seven man commission, to take the place of Howard B. Bloomer, chairman, of Detroit, who resigned last week.

The change in the personnel of the new conservation commission was the signing last week of the measure by which at least two members of that body must be from the upper peninsula. Mr. Bloomer stepped out, of his volition, to save Gov. Green any embarrassment in enforcing the law. All other commissioners were reappointed. The commissioners are appointed for six-year terms. Salary of Director George Hogarth was raised from $5,000 to $7,500 annually by the measure also.

LOW GRADE WOOL CUTS PRICES

A good market for wool during the past two years and considerable competition among wool buyers has enabled Michigan farmers to obtain top prices for a grade of fleece on which a considerable price cut will be made if market conditions reduce the demand for wool, according to a statement by members of the animal husbandry department at Michigan State college.

The possible loss from price reductions can be avoided if a few precautions are taken before the sheep are sheared and proper care is used in the tying up the fleece after shearing.

The fleece, before shearing, should be kept free from burrs, chaff, and other foreign material. The sheep should be tagged and care used to remove all soiled portions of the fleece. Shearing should be done in a clean floor or canvas and the sheep should be dry when they are sheared.

Second cuts made in the fleece while shearing reduce the length of staple and make the wool less valuable to the manufacturer. Fleeces should be tied loosely with the flesh side out. No dark wool should be included in the fleece.

Ungraded hemp twines and sisal twines are very objectionable when used for tying fleeces. Fibers from these twines can not be removed from the fleece while it is being prepared for the woolen mills, and as these fibers will not take the dye which is used for the cloth, the fibers must be removed by hand labor. Paper twine is necessary for tying fleeces.

Poet's Lyric Tribute to Queen of Beauty

Julian Hawthorne saw a great deal of Joaquin Miller, the "Poet of the Sierras," when both were living in London years ago, a writer in the Kansas City Times tells us. Once at a garden party at which Lillie Langtry—then in the first bloom of her beauty—was the center of attraction, Hawthorne introduced the poet to the ravishing Jersey Lily.

"I left them talking prosperously," relates Hawthorne in his reminiscences, "Shapes That Pass," "but Joaquin came hastening after me in a few moments.

"Have you got a bit of paper?" he asked. "I have a pencil; she wants me to write her a lyric."

"I found an old envelope in my pocket," adds Julian, "he seized it and squatted down on the turf, where I left him scribbling and went back to keep Lillie till he was ready. It seemed hardly five minutes before he came stalking toward us smiling in his yellow beard and waving the envelope."

And here is the lyric. Hawthorne says he does not think it has been in print till now:

If all God's earth a garden were,
And all the women flowers,
And I a bee that buzzes there,
Through all the summer hours,
Oh, I would buzz the garden through
For honey—till I came to you!

WEEK OF APRIL 14

Temperatures as a whole in Michigan for the week beginning April 14 will range on the low side of the normal point. At the very beginning of the week readings of the thermometer will show seasonal conditions but just before the middle of the week we are expecting a change to much cooler.

A reaction to warmer will occur about Wednesday with still another drop shortly after. However, during the last two days of this week we are expecting temperatures will range above the seasonal normals with readings as high as 60 to 70 degrees in southern half of Michigan.

The variations in temperature this week will be caused by several storm centers that are expected to cross over or near this state. The first one will make its appearance at the very beginning of this week.

During Sunday and Monday there will be storms of wind and locally severe rain storms, probably some snow flurries. Somewhat similar conditions will probably occur about Wednesday or Thursday.

The latter days of the week will again be under the influence of a storm center but we hardly are expecting as much precipitation from this last storm area as of those during early part of week.

Best Days This Week For gardening and farm operations: April 15, 16, 19 and 20 from 5:30 to 6:45 and 9 to 11 a. m. and 4:15 to 6:45 p. m.

For fishing: April 15 and 16. For baking: April 15 and 16. Set ducks, geese and turkeys: April 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20.

JACK and JILL

By CLIFFORD WEBB

(Copyright, 1938, the Central Press Association, Inc.)

"It was sweet in you, Jill Stuart," she said, in a voice shaking with emotion, as she caught at the hand of the woman who had come so unexpectedly to the rescue of her pride, "awfully sweet, saving me from humiliation in the way you did after all th' mean things I've said to and about you. You certainly have got a kind heart. I'm not going to try and thank you now. Th' only way I can do that is by actions. Maybe some day you'll have reason to be glad that you did me th' good turn that you did today. There may come a time when 'Sweet Amity' can show how to be grateful!"

How and to what extent that seemingly tentative prediction was to be fulfilled none there even dreamed. But the time did come when Jill was to recall the incident with strangely conflicting emotions.

It really was rather a "manly" thing to do, making that acknowledgment of her indebtedness that Amity Smythe made to Jill that afternoon in the drug store in the presence of four other women and a man. It was a "manly" thing in that it was said with a straightforward earnestness that many women would have found difficult. It made an instant and profound impression on Jill. She knew instinctively that sincerity backed the utterance of every word.

"I'm glad, Amity, that you take it that way," said Jill, a new friendliness welling up in her heart for this old enemy. "I was a little afraid you might think I was trying to be patronizing. Of course you understand why Miss Sweeney didn't include you at first. She thought you and I were real enemies and that, as the party was being given to celebrate Tony's and my entry into a new field, I wouldn't want you. But I'm too happy in getting this chance to be able to see anybody else unhappy. I'm glad we are friends again."

"Jill Stuart," whispered Ann McGuffey a few minutes later, "you're a darling! I take off my chapeau to you as the best sport in Elliston! Poor old Amity. When Mike Sweeney passed her up in the count I just wanted to scream with rage. Not that I didn't think Amity deserved it, but it was so obviously a case of playing for your favor. Then when you came across like the queen you are, I wanted to shout!"

"She turned to the others and held up her hand to attract attention. 'Listen, everybody!' she said, a husky little note in her voice that betrayed her real emotions. 'We all saw and heard what Jill Stuart just did and I suggest we give her a vote of thanks for pointing the way and showing how a woman can be a 'good fellow' as well as a man. We might all of us take a lesson from Jill's book. I'll bet it'll be a long while before anyone will hear Amity Smythe's meow about 'dancing babies!'"

"Jill! Th' thweet woman!" warbled the natural blonde with the shimmery ankles. "May her necktbt baby be thwintw and both be named Bill!"

"Oh, heavens! What a frightful wish!" cried Jill, horrified at the mere suggestion of such a possibility. "And I supposed Billie was my friend, too!"

Whereupon Tony projected himself into the temporary focus of all eyes by a timely proposal. The "nice young man in white" fairly flew to execute orders. It was Mike Sweeney who proposed a toast to Jill, and they drank it standing.

"This being Thursday," she continued, favoring Tony with a smile that lifted the young hooper into a state bordering on ecstatic, "I propose that everybody present come over to our house this evening. Bring your Dad with you, Jill," she added to the latter, as she began an adjustment of her furs. "I'll phone Professor Le Tarte to come over."

He enjoyed being called a "jolly good fellow." But Pat wanted at least a showing of appreciation for his efforts. Ingratitude and failure to appreciate him was lead in his heart.

Mike had invited some 20 couples, besides those of the drug store count. Everyone had come; they always did when the Sweeneys entertained. So the party numbered close to 50. A quick mental estimate at 2 o'clock told Pat the party already had cost him over $300, not counting the extras. He called Tony to one side.

"Get this bunch of 'moon-lushers on their way!" he entreated his young friend, almost tearfully.

Tony passed the word to Jill, who passed it on. In five minutes part of those scheduled for the Pittsburgh party had donned their wraps. It was the start of the exodus. Jill waited. Her "outfit half" was absent. Some time later the welkin knew the exodus was under way. It rang merrily. And still Jill waited. It occurred to her that it was getting to be something of a habit.

Finally she went out and climbed into their sedan, starting up the motor to heat the interior. For the November air was cold. Her heart told her that Jack was with Nita Ravelle in some one of the numerous cozy corners in the big old-fashioned "House That Jack Built." Having a petting party, presumably, for she had noticed that both of them were in a very sociable mood.

She looked out into the misty gray of the faint moon-lit morning. All the other cars had departed. Suddenly she caught the crunching sound of someone walking along the gravelled path. Jack at last! She saw the outlines of a man's figure against the skyline and opened the car door as the figure stepped from the walk and came toward the sedan. There was a dull ache in her heart, an ache that had been growing for months, for she felt that Jack and she were drifting slowly but surely apart. But she would make no reference to his evident philandering. If he—

She started back, clutching at the door to pull it shut. The man was not Jack. It was Professor Le Tarte, and the professor was intoxicated! "Thish ish luck!" he gurgled, thickly, as he grabbed the inside handle of the door and placed a foot on the running board. "I thought I wush gonna have t' hoof it int' town! But 'frindsh Stursh' gimme lift, I kesh."

"No, no—wait!" protested Jill, placing her hand against his shoulder to prevent his entrance. "Jack—my husband—isn't here yet!"

"No, no—wait!" protested Jill, placing her hand against his shoulder to prevent his entrance. "Jack—my husband—isn't here yet!"

CHAPTER XXXI

The morning of the night that was to witness Jill's and Tony's premiere in Pittsburgh broke clear and warm, a typical Indian summer morning. Arrangements had been made at Mike's party for all the guests save Jill and Jack to be at Central Drug store at 8 a. m. sharp. Jill, having a trunk to carry, would wait at her apartment with Jack and Tony and his suit cases. Here they were picked up by the limousine at 8:15. Their luggage loaded in by Mike's new chauffeur, Dennis O'Connor, and the party was on its way.

"Oi, Oi, Oi!" squealed Billie Browne, in accents wildly joyful, "ain't we got fun—ain't we got two funth?" "Oi, Oi, Oi!"

"Be'ave yirself, Bill Brown!" admonished Ann McGuffey, her tricky tongue revealing a bit of the brogue, as it was likely to do at times when she forgot to watch it. "Else Oi tike ye 'cross me knac an' spank ye!"

"Oi, Oi, Oi!" squawked Bill, in repetition, and wrinkled her pretty nose contemptuously at the McGuffey threat. "Whoth 'fraid of thpankinth? Thath ith th' day they let flappeth get gay. Thou juth wat' th' your own thatep, Thithter Ann!"

Meanwhile Jill Stuart was puzzling her brain over the radical change in Mike Sweeney's manner toward her. The change seemed to date from the incident in the drug store when Jill had asked Mike to invite Amity Smythe to her town party.

Whereas, previous to that time, Mike had treated Jill with scant courtesy, since then she had been continuously on the alert to show her every attention; eager, apparently, to please and to gain her favor.

What did it mean? This was the question Jill had asked herself time and again. Did Mike Sweeney have any ulterior motive in this seeking her good will? It pointed to the strength of the girl's personality that Jill's sub-conscious self wanted Mike Sweeney to prove up square. She felt that despite her former dislike she was desirous, even eager, to have Mike as a real friend.

"Do you intend, Jill, to follow dancing as a career?" asked Ann McGuffey. The general conversation had been centering around professional dancing, the number of girls who had acquired at least a modicum of fame and fortune at it, and who they were. Tony had a list at his tongue's end as long as his arm. Listening to him, one would have thought professional dancers—men, as well as women—hobnobbed only with kings, dukes and earls. Jill considered a moment before answering Ann's question.

"Well," she said, finally, and watched from the corner of her eye, as it were, for the effect of her reply on Jack, "that depends entirely upon circumstances. I'm not particularly enthusiastic about it now, since I have children to care for. Before I was married I had expected to take it up as a career. Since then I've thought but little about it until that night in Pittsburgh, when Tony and I seemed to make something of a hit. But that was more than seven months ago. Now we've got a chance to find out something of what such a life would mean, and how much of a chance we have to amount to anything worth while."

Jack, she had observed, had paid her the compliment of his close attention. He seemed at least interested in what her plans might be.

"I don't thye why your babyth should interfere with your career," said Billie Browne, whose interest in Tony was getting to be slightly irksome to that young man since Mike Sweeney had begun to smile on him again and with increasing frequency. For Mike, in Tony's opinion, had a smile that was a joy to behold. But, ye gods of love and the Pipes of Pan, her laugh!

Mike's laugh! It bubbled and gurgled, just like the gurgle of a bubbling brook! It was a thing of beauty in harmony, a joy and a delight to the ear! Tony held his breath when Mike laughed. Mike! He shuddered. What a name, even though a nickname, to tie onto a girl with a laugh like that!

And then, as if to prove how right he was, Mike laughed gleefully at the remark Billie Browne had made.

"You'll probably see plainly enough, Billie," she said, bending an Irish gray eye on the inquisitive little blonde, "if you ever have any babies of your own!"

Then she seemed to realize the possible inference of this speech, and so hurried to add: "We all have our hopes, of course, and remember—There swims no goose so gray soon or late, she finds some honest gander for a mate!"

"Do you know, Mike?" observed Ann McGuffey meditatively, "I'm beginning to believe that you have Irish blood in your veins!"

"Yes," said Mike, pulling a long upper lip. "tis said that me mither an' me fay'ther wor Oirish, so Oi'm Oirish, too, by their consint!"

Laughter and gay spirits. Happiness seemed to pervade the hearts of them all. Everybody appeared to be infected with a desire to make it a gala day. And none in the party whose laugh rang truer than Amity Smythe's. She seemed entirely like a different girl from the gossip who had been wont to visit the drug store and there pour out the vitriol of her tongue on those she didn't like. Looking at her that morning, Jill marveled at the change.

It was decided that the six women and three men constituted an unbalanced party, so Professor Le Tarte was delegated to secure three more men. This was easy for the professor who was well acquainted with the lounge lizards and extra hoofers of the hotels.

"A swell young dame from up in the sticks was throwing a party," was what the lizards were informed. They would get their dinner in return for their best behavior fronts. No off-color stuff went, they were given to understand. Thus were Ann, Billie and Amity paired off. Tony and Mike, Jack and Jill, the professor and Nita Ravelle, made up the regulars. Mike as the hostess, paid all bills.

Drive as long, as far, and as fast as you like—but be sure you use the New Mobiloil

YOUR car is built to take you as far as you want to go—swiftly and without stopping.

This imposes a new strain on lubricating oil—a strain unknown to the bigger, slower, cooler engines of a few years ago.

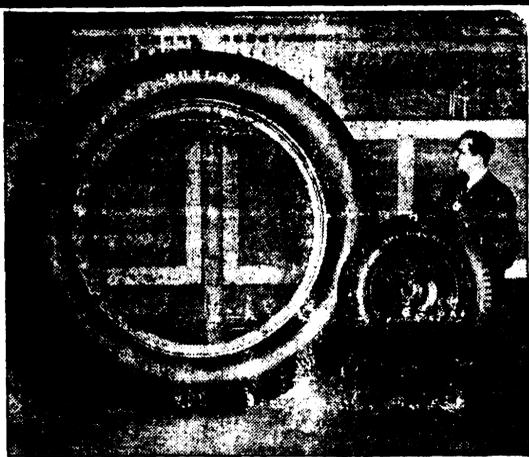

The oil must stand up longer. It must be fuller bodied. It must circulate more freely. In short it must have a new and wider margin of safety.

This greater margin of lubricating safety has been built into the New Mobiloil

We have the correct grade for your car.

This interesting picture of the world's largest airplane tire was received by me from the Dunlop Tire Co. This large tire, which has been on exhibition by the Dunlop Tire and Rubber Co. at an aviation show in Buffalo, New York, was made for a huge bombing plane. The tire is over 7 feet high, 17 inches wide, and weighs 200 pounds.

An idea of its great size may be obtained by comparing it with Dunlop's super-automobile tire, the John Boyd Dunlop, which appears alongside. The picture gives a rather startling outlook into the future. While today we are selling only automobile tires, who knows but that in three years we will have a regular established trade on all kinds and sizes of airplane tires.

"In fact, the varied development of the tire business was one reason why we chose to represent Dunlops. As founders of the pneumatic tire industry, first to develop the straight side tire, first to own its own rubber plantation, and lately, first to bond Dunlop Tires with a Surety Bond, Dunlop could be counted upon to maintain leadership no matter how rapid the pace. The Surety Bond, which is Dunlop's newest idea, gives a hint of how tire buying is progressing. Under the terms of this bonded guarantee all Dunlop Tires are covered against almost every conceivable road hazard, even if the trouble was caused by accident or abuse. And the best part of it all is that we handle any claims right here in our store, and can make settlements instantly without delay or red tape. Compare that with old-fashioned adjustment methods of a few years ago and you see that things are moving and that even the huge airplane tire, which is today a curiosity may become commonplace tomorrow.

CURRENT COMMENT

The case of Mrs. Gann which at the present time has forced the Mexican war prohibition etc. off the front page is a typical instance of American snobbery. Mrs. Gann is the sister of Vice President Curtis. As he is unmarried she acts as hostess at all functions sponsored by him. Evidently she is not of the social elite so the social leaders there secured a ruling from Ex Secy of State Kellogg that she ranked below the forty-seven foreign ambassadors and their wives and should be placed at the foot of the table below them. Vice President Curtis announced that he would refuse to abide by any such decision and would place his sister where he pleased at all social functions of his. Now the fat is in the fire for never before has social precedent been so flaunted at Washington.

The no hunting on Sunday laws were passed by several counties at the spring election. This illustrates the great mania of the American people for passing multiple laws and then neglecting to enforce them. We believe this law is absolutely meaningless. According to Prof. Attorney Stuhburg of Washtenaw County where such a law was recently passed a man may hunt on his own farm or give permission to others to do the same. There is already a law forbidding hunting on land without obtaining the owners permission. So why pass another law covering the same thing.

Columns have been printed about the Aurora, Illinois tragedy, most of which is propropaganda and beside the point. The facts of the case are that Aurora was to Chicago what Hamtramach and Ecorse are to Detroit. Bootlegging there had become the chief industry. A prosecuting attorney was elected on a clean-up platform by an overwhelming majority. A deputy attempted to arrest an accused bootlegger. The latter was armed and resisted arrest. In the fight that followed, the liquor vendors wife was killed. Maybe the officer was unduly zealous in performance of his duty but if there had not been flagrant law violation there raiding would have been unnecessary. This is merely the result of lawlessness run wild.

PENALTIES EXACTED ON LAMB SHIPMENTS

Penalties, which in some Michigan cases have reached $250 a carload, assessed by livestock buyers against the shippers of poor quality lambs have failed to keep these lambs off the markets and the buyers are now offering prizes to counties in which the largest percentage of flock owners adopt practices which will improve the market value of their lambs.

Undocked lambs and ram lambs are most discriminated against in the terminal markets. Wether lambs are worth 30 cents to three dollars a hundred weight more than ram lambs and undocked animals suffer a price cut of from 15 cents to one dollar a hundredweight.
