The hold up occurred at 8:40 a. m. when Dale Darrow, a clerk in the store who is a former Pinckney boy was placing the jewelry in the window. Darrow turned to wait on a man about 24 years old who entered the store. The stranger covered Darrow with a gun and started to rifle the store. Arthur Doolin, another store employe entered and was followed by a man of 45 who covered him with a gun. Darrow and Doolin were ordered to lie on the floor while the bandits looted the store. The bandits were not masked. So far they have not been identified or any clues discovered.

Tuesday he was arraigned on the charge of resisting an officer while armed and bail was set at $10,000.

This is the third time Crumbaugh has been arrested for violating the prohibition law. The first time he got off on account of a faulty search warrant. Last March he was again nabbed and bound over to the circuit court for trial to occur May 20.

STOCKBRIDGE GIVES NEW SCHOOL A MAJORITY OF 7

At a special election held at Stockbridge Monday, the proposition to bond for a new public school building carried by a majority of seven votes. This is the fourth election held on the question, the issue being debated at the first three held.
Saline and other towns where the same or similar propositions have been turned down should take heart and resubmit the proposition to a vote remembering the story of Robert Bruce and the spider.

SCHOOL NOTES

We wish to correct an error which appeared in the paper regarding the commencement exercises.

After careful examination of the work accomplished by the class during the last four years, it was found that five members of the class, only nine-tenths of one percent, did not enough difference to permit a fair and honest selection of the best student, as the final examinations in June might easily place any one of the first five in the first place.

In view of this, a special award was awarded that particular part which he or she was best suited to prepare and deliver.

The program will be as follows:
Salutatory Willa Ina Bourbonnais
Poem Virginia Knapik
Giftatory Viola Burnett
Prophecy Virginia Knapik
Will J. Nash
History L. E. Gorman
Oration M. E. Durkin

Riggs Fellowship Discontinued at "U"

The Riggs Fellowships organized at the University of Michigan in 1923, through the gift of property by Miss Frances E. Riggs of Detroit, will be discontinued on completion of work by the present appointees and the fund will be devoted to student loan purposes, it has been announced by Dr. Frank Robbins, assistant to the president of the university.

The Riggs Fellowships provided for a few students to be sent to English universities for graduate work and for students from the British Isles to come to the university at Ann Arbor for advanced study. Fifteen students have come from England for study here and three have gone from the University of Michigan to England since the fellowships were established, Dr. Robbins said.

West State W. S. T. C. Students Favored

Vern Mable of Cedar Springs, Western State Teacher's College Junior, was elected president of the Student Association at the annual spring election. Otto Grein of River City, baseball star, was named vice president, and Miss Alice Lewis of Greenville won the secretary's post. Miss Dorothy Haight of Ionia is treasurer.

Class representatives of the student council were elected as follows: Juniors, Don Yanka, Vicksburg; sophomores, Paul Gesthart, River Rouge; freshmen, Harold Althoff, Fremont, O.

By an overwhelming vote the student body expressed itself in favor of freshmen wearing caps. They also voted to make the office of student treasurer an appointive one.

Poems That Live

THE TEST
I held her hand, the pledge of bliss,
Her hand that trembled and withdrew;
She bent her head before my kiss—
My heart was sure that hers was true.

Now I have told her I must part,
She shakes my hand, she bids adieu,
Her hands the kiss. Alas, my heart!
How never was the heart for you.
—Walter S. Landor (1775-1864).

Keep Spring the Year 'Round With Plants

By HILDA HUNT

The flowers that bloom in the spring have everything to do with the case. They keep spring with us the year 'round if we are wise enough to provide a place for them in our homes. The love of flowers is, after all, the most universal love, circling the globe. Perhaps not every home in every country, but most homes in all countries, welcome the potted plant to brighten the living room, dining room or kitchen. Potted plants on the porch in summer give a cooler atmosphere. What could be cooler looking than the porch with wrought iron stands, such as those in the sketch, dripping ivy, with a few flowering plants in the center?

Again, there is the wrought iron stand, finished in antique green, holding six pots which may be painted orange or blue or whatever color one desires, each filled with ivy trained to climb over and decorate the iron work of the stand. This placed at one end, or in the center, of the sun porch, against the concrete wall, has a most cooling and refreshing effect.

Nor are these potted plants to be entirely relegated to the porch. They are quite as attractive indoors. The wall bracket for trailing ivy, for instance, would look quite as well against the porch wall. You will find one of these brackets in Italian style sketched at the lower right, while at the lower left is a tricky table flower stand holding a vase for cut flowers, as appropriate for the hall table as for the stand on the piazza.

Unusual Arrangement
These are but a few of the more unusual ways of arranging potted plants for indoor use. There are any number of others, like the long narrow table that sets in the window for the row of potted flowers—geraniums, tulips, crocuses, fuchsia, azaleas or any other flowering plant that will grow in pots. And there are the window boxes in which to place the potted plants. These may be of wood, wicker or iron, as fancy dictates, or as the type of furniture in the room calls for.

There is an advantage in having the plants in separate pots rather than planted directly in the box. In the pots they can be easily turned 'round toward the sun from time to time.

This turning keeps the plants balanced and their blooms from becoming one sided, as all plants have a tendency to grow toward the sun. The same is true of the potted plants and flowers on the taller stands.

Whether you have your potted plants arranged on stands, in window boxes, or just a row of flowering pots on the window sill, there is something gay and welcoming about them that brightens the house and waves a greeting to guest and family alike. They brighten the corner where they are, and are well worth the little care and attention they receive.

Plant 14,000 Trees for Morton Arboretum

Nearly 14,000 young trees of 30 varieties have been set out near the Morton Salt Co. plant at Ludington to be planted later in the 40-acre Joy Morton arboretum fronting Pere Marquette lake.

The land to form the arboretum has been plowed and is being dragged and disced. It was platted by C. E. Godshalk, superintendent of the Morton arboretum at Lisle, Ill.

Joy Morton, who is president of the Morton Salt Co., is establishing the arboretum to beautify the barren 40-acre tract on the east side of the lake. The land was vacated years ago when the lumber industry died. Most of it forms the boundary of the Fourth ward.

The young stock has been set out in a fenced enclosure. There are 7,500 willow and poplar cuttings, four varieties of maple, three birch, three juniper, three of spruce, four of pine, besides hemlock arborvitae, elm, oak and other species.

Chinese Student at Albion Wins Award in Music

Miss Lucy Leng, Albion college student from China, is the first foreigner to receive one of the silver trophy cups offered to Albion students who accomplish outstanding achievements. She has been awarded the Jennie A. Worthington cup, which annually is presented to the student of the school of music who has done the best work.

Miss Leng is an accomplished vocalist and pianist and plans to pursue music as an avocation in a Chinese school after her graduation here in June.

After the Persians

Pretty Dorothy Rifely of the St. Petersburg, Fla., Beta Woman's club, won a prize with her attractive beach pajamas made a la Persian. All costumes entered in the contest cost less than $2.

A kindly looking old gentleman was stopped by a very little girl carrying a parcel.
"Please, sir," she said politely, "is this the second turning to the left?"

Short Cuts in the School No Saving

Short cuts in education—hasty steps by school officials, impromptu acts of expediency by teachers, snapshot judgment by parents of pupils—often prove the longest way to the goal.

Ill-considered short cuts can lead to disturbing consequences and, in many instances, to waste of community funds, to impairment of school morale, to a wrong attitude on the part of the pupils.

Short cuts in the schools can be as detrimental as in any other activity of life. That they can be the bane of existence is evidenced in our daily lives by the jaywalker who perils his life to cross the street in midblock; the fellow who tramples the lawn at street corners; the chap who dashes zig-zaggedly through crowded traffic just to gain a second of time; the automobile driver who takes the turn at fifty an hour with consequent strain on offside tires.

There is the misguided youth who washes the starboard side of his face and neglects the highways and byways of ears and neck; the individual who jumps to the closing chapter of a book to know how the plot comes out; who wants to leap headlong into the game but is loath to undergo the necessary period of training; who indulges in snap judgment rather than endure the discomfort of thinking his way to a logical conclusion.

Short-sighted short cuts find their parallel in the schools. The new member of the school board who wants to control the school policies before he has become acquainted with the school needs through experience is taking a short cut. The teacher who wishes to get into the school system through influence of friends or other means before she has prepared herself by proper training and practice-teaching is taking the short cut. The pupil who quits school in order to get to earning money is taking the short cut. The parent who wants the child passed on to the next succeeding grade in spite of the fact that the child's foundation is not adequate is advocating the short cut. The pupil who loafs in school and manages to get through to graduation partly on bluff is taking the short cut.

The school officials who promote policies tempered by local pressure, where these are not for the best interests for public favor is taking the short cut. The teacher who goes direct to the board of education on school problems, or the school official who deals directly with the teacher rather than through the regular channel of the superintendent's office, is taking the short cut. The parent who condones antagonistic sentiment to school or teacher on the part of the pupil is encouraging that pupil to take the short cut. The community unwilling to finance adequately the deserving school program is taking the short cut. The school district which affords a six month school while its neighbors operate nine months is taking the short cut. The parent who unloads on the school all responsibility for pupil attendance, progress and behavior is taking the short cut.

The business of education is a seasoned profession, evolved by thinking men and women, based upon years of research and experience. Advocates of short cuts in it should think before lending support to doubtful departures.

Little Boy, calling father at office: "Hello, who is this?"
Father, recognizing son's voice: "The smartest man in the world."
Little Boy: "Pardon me, I got the wrong number."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

MENU HINT
Halved Grapefruits
Scalloped Stuffed Eggs
Parsley New Potatoes
Radishes Young Onions
Buttered Asparagus
Strawberry Shortcake Coffee

This is a luncheon menu and might serve for the shower for the bride. Eggs are plentiful just now, so we are using them in a new way for the main dish. Take centers out of grapefruits, loosen sections with knife and sweeten slightly. Chill and serve with strawberry in center of each.

Today's Recipes
Scalloped Stuffed Eggs—Hard-cook as many eggs as desired by placing them in boiling water and setting on the back of the stove, or other warm place, for forty minutes. Then immerse in cold water to chill so the shells can be removed lengthwise and remove the yolks; mash well and moisten with melted butter or cream, and add one or two tablespoons of finely minced ham or other savory meat and seasonings. The seasonings may be salt, mustard, paprika and a few drops of Worcestershire sauce. Refill the cavities of the whites with this mixture and press the two halves together. For six eggs make a well seasoned white sauce, using one cup of milk and one-half cup cream. In a buttered baking dish place part of the sauce; on this lay the stuffed eggs and pour remainder of sauce over all. Sprinkle with grated cheese or buttered crumbs and bake in hot oven twenty minutes.

SUGGESTIONS
Avoid Waste
Food is often wasted by not receiving proper care after it is brought into the home. We leave milk bottles uncovered and the milk becomes contaminated. We place left-over foods in the refrigerator and forget to use them. We buy fruit in large quantities and it decays. We leave the plate of butter in a warm place and it melts. We forget the carrots and find them shriveled and unfit to eat.

Avoid this household waste by making daily inspection of the refrigerator and pantry or closet where foods are stored and watch those little leaks that happen just because you are a bit thoughtless.

Must Feed Ducks In Cadillac Area

Cadillac Waltonites have discovered that the mallards recently planted in Lake Cadillac and Lake Mitchell have not been able to forage for food because of their clipped wings, and because their early training has made them tame and they expect to be fed. So the league members have been urged to donate food for the duck family until its members have readjusted themselves to their wild environment.

Words of Wisdom

A new broom sweeps clean.—Lyly.
Take rest; a field that has rested gives a bountiful crop.—Ovid.
Deep vengeance is the daughter of deep silence.—Alfieri.
In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love.—Tennyson.
Diamonds cut diamonds.—John Ford.

The World and All

By CHARLES B. DRISCOLL

BANKRUPTCIES

The New York bankruptcy scandals threatened to run away from the investigators like a prairie fire. A federal judge resigned and a big lawyer committed suicide, and there came a lull. Was the fire stopped? Or was it only delayed, while it quietly ate its way around the ends of the space thus plowed up? I don't know.

The bankruptcy business of this country must be cleaned up some time. If the dry tinder of scandal keeps on piling up for another ten or twenty years, what a red sky we'll have in this fair land of ours some morning!

I'd like to see a very learned, honest, determined and courageous United States commission, appointed by the president to make a thorough examination into the whole field of bankruptcy proceedings, the appointments and activities of federal receivers in all parts of the country, and the handling of the affairs of bankrupts. Such a commission should have power to subpoena witnesses and records, and to compel witnesses to answer questions, no matter how rich the witness. Such a commission, I think, might well and profitably spend ten years sifting evidence, preparing prosecutions and assisting prosecutors, and framing proposals for legislative reform of the whole machinery of bankruptcy.

Wherever professional receivers in bankruptcy, enjoying fat plums at the hands of federal judges over long periods of years, have retired from the profession with loot consisting of the wreckage of other men's fortunes, the proposed commission ought to have quite a little work on its hands.

Wherever such professional receivers have themselves taken over the businesses of bankrupts, greatly to their own profit, and have owned and operated such businesses in their own names, after collusion or apparent collusion having been used to throw the businesses into bankruptcy, the proposed commission ought to settle down for a nice long stay, with plenty of pencils and paper.

Who'll second the motion?

Living and Loving

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

HUMAN CONDUCT RELIES LARGELY ON INDIVIDUAL, ASSERTS VIRGINIA LEE

I asked a couple of charming young women—unmarried—what they thought made the most unhappiness in married life. One said unfaithfulness and the other jealousy. I contended that to be unfaithful a person must have a certain amount of attractiveness, and wouldn't a girl, for instance, rather have a husband whom other girls admired, than a dull? Therefore, couldn't she, perhaps, forgive a flirtatious husband easier than one with some other fault? But one of the girls still insisted she could not forgive a man who was unfaithful.

The other said she had a relative who had wrecked the happiness of his home because of his unreasoning jealousy. When I was young, like these two, I used to cogitate deeply on human conduct, and at last remarked that "it all depends on the individual." And I'm still inclined to think my youthful judgment correct. The handling of any situation DOES depend on the individual involved. And no two handle things alike.

"Dear Virginia Lee: Won't you please help me? I am 23, going with a man 38. I love him and he claims he loves me, that he can't do without me. But when he gets angry at me he goes with other girls until we speak. Then he is all right again for awhile. He has been married, but is not living with his wife. He claims he does not love her, but when he drinks he talks about his wife and family. Do you think the reason he talks is on account of his children? Their ages are from 7 to 18. They had three.

"They have been parted for two years. He claims the reason he left her was on account of her running around and leaving the children home by themselves. I have also been married, but I am not living with my husband. I have been parted from him nine months. I have seen my mistake and I wrote to him and said I was sorry, let's start all over again, but he did not answer my letter.

"Anxious."
You women who have husbands and leave them and love some one else and want to marry them and still ask to be taken back by your husbands, puzzle me. How can you love this man you tell me about and yet be hurt because your husband did not answer your letter and invite you to come back to him? Maybe he did not get the letter, by the by. I think it highly probable that your 38-year-old friend is secretly mourning the loss of his wife and family, as he talks of them when he is not himself. Why not get to work earnestly to make good in some line, forget this second man and try to make good to go back to your husband if, later, he wants you?

Joy: How do you know the boy isn't already married? It is dangerous to allow such familiarities from a man you merely know in such a way. He thinks he is being a successful salesman, and that is his "line." If he was really in love with you he would try to see you at your home. If a boy puts his arms around you and you don't like it, either tell him to stop as if you meant it, or move away and keep out of his way.

"Dear Virginia Lee: I am a girl in high school and am quite fond of a boy who is two years my senior. The boy is fairly good looking and has a wonderful personality. At times he seems to like me and other times he seems quite cool. Could you tell me which action to accept? "In Doubt."

He's probably one of those moody people, dear, and the fact that he is cool sometimes does not mean that he likes you less, but that he is feeling that way to everyone. Pay no attention to it and just be friendly as ever. Such people make rather trying friends, as you never know how they are going to be.

"Dear Virginia Lee: I am 19. I have two boy friends who are brothers. Both say they love me dearly and want to marry. Both have good sense and want to wait until they can give me a home. One is 23, has a good business of his own. The other is 19 and never stays with one job long. If I go with 19, 23 will break, but if I go with 23, 19 says it's all right. I am a person that can learn to care for anyone. Don't you think I'm old enough to go with one boy steady? I am rather settled and don't care about running around. Please advise as soon as possible, because I'm going to JUMP at your advice.

Puzzled Blue Eyes."
If you are ready to settle down and can love 23, he is your best bet for a boy friend and a husband, too. The other is too young to consider seriously and too happy-go-lucky.

With the Women of Today

Mrs. Edward P. Costigan

The national board of directors of the National League of Women Voters, in recent session at Washington, D. C., recognized the newly organized Colorado state league as affiliated with the national body. Mrs. Edward P. Costigan of Denver is president. The National League is now organized in 45 states, Hawaii and the District of Columbia.

Mrs. Costigan was president of the District of Columbia league during her residence in Washington, while Mr. Costigan was a member of the federal trade commission. She was also, at one time, chairman of the league's committee on living costs.

The only states in which the National League is not now organized are Arkansas, Idaho and Wyoming. There are 772 local leagues in the 45 states organized.

By LILIAN CAMPBELL

Beautiful Custom
The Daughters of 1812 have a beautiful custom of paying tribute to members deceased during the year at the national conventions. As a short eulogy is given, a page places a flower in a star for each name on the list.

Objects to Feminine Appendix
Amelia Earhart, the first woman to cross the Atlantic in an airplane from west to east, objects to the term aviatrix. "Let's not draw the sex line," she says. "The requirements for an aviator are merely good eyesight and muscular control. It is nonsense to say that a woman hasn't enough endurance to be a flyer. It has been proved many times that women have more endurance than men."

Opening the New York concert season, Miss Esther Dale, soprano, will give a recital at Town Hall in October. This will be the second time Miss Dale has headed the list of artists appearing in New York. Later she will sing for the Ladies' Musical Club of Quebec.

Mae: "Did you ever dance the Charleston?"
Jimmy: "Yes, once."
Mae: "When was that?"
Jimmy: "One day while I was cracking walnuts and struck my thumb with a hammer."

STATE OF MICHIGAN
The Probate Court for the County of Livingston

At session of said court, at the Probate Office in the City of Howell in said County, on the 18th day of April A. D. 1929.

Present: Hon. Willis L. Lyons, Judge of Probate.

LEGISLATIVE NEWS

Michigan's 55th legislature went home last week, after having laid on the desk of Gov. Fred W. Green, appropriations which point to a general property tax of some $29,000,000, the largest in the history of the state a capital building fund bill; a malt tax bill; and many other measures ranging in subject matter from sterilization of feeble-minded people, to the salaries of justices of the supreme court.

When the gravel of Lt. Gov. Dickinson, president of the senate, fell in the upper house, to be echoed by the resounding clump of the wooden mallet wielded by the sturdy hand of Rep. Fred R. Ming, speaker of the house, the time was 9:25 o'clock, Wednesday night, May 8.

But with the arrival of the time when the legislators put on their hats and reached for time-tables or filled gas tanks to the top, the item also arrived for Gov. Green to dip his pen into the gubernatorial ink-well and proceed to slash away items in the huge appropriation bills dumped on his desk by the 132 legislators who filed out with decorum and quietude in marked contrast with the historic ribaldry which has marked previous sessions.

The tax levy probably won't be $29,000,000; the governor is almost sure to veto items and reduce others in the appropriation measures. Last year's tentative levy was reduced from $27,000,000 to $20,500,000 by the governor.

The last week, or rather stub week, of the legislature, was a condensed review of the entire session, for it was then that important bills long the subject of contention, and lesser bills thought buried in committees, were brought to the center of the stage for consideration which was rapid. Bills of weight and significance were rapped through the two houses with machine-gun celerity.

The last two days of the session were taken up almost entirely with the passage of the vital and highly important Hartman bill providing funds for the administration-sponsored plan for rehabilitation of state institutions. This measure was drafted for the program of construction and repair of state mental hospitals, educational institutions, prisons and a few miscellaneous items.

The history of the measure introduced by Rep. Gus T. Hartman of Houghton, is a weary-long one, extending, in all its intricacies, for nearly the entire length of the session. As originally introduced, it was a mill tax, providing for the levying of an eight-tenths of a mill tax on each dollar of taxable property in the state. The measure would have raised about $7,000,000 a year, or $23,000,000 in four years, to be expended in the next ten years. It was in this form that the house of representatives passed the measure and sent it to the senate.

The senate finance committee rewrote the measure, reporting it out as a straight appropriation bill, with about $3,000,000 cut out in the program for the first two years. The items in the Hartman bill for the last two years were untouched, in recognition of the fact that with the possible closing of the Great administration at the end of this term, the next administration could not be held to any appropriation promised by Gov. Green. The senate passed the rewritten bill, but the house spurned it, throwing it into conference. The differences between the two houses were not only technical but real, and in one instance, at least, resentment developed. This was in the rough treatment which the College of Mines at Houghton had received from the senate. The appropriation for this school, located in Rep. Hartman's home town, was badly cut. It was restored in conference committee, however, and not until late Wednesday afternoon had both houses approved the measure.

Most startling of the final day's developments was passage of a malt tax measure, suddenly revived in the senate taxation committee at the request of the governor who was pressed for means of reducing the property tax levy for the coming biennium. The measure, originally introduced by Rep. Charles H. Culver, Detroit, was brought from obscurity at a hurried session of the senate taxation committee and rolled through the upper house by a bare majority, getting a better margin in the house.

The malt tax provides for the collection of 25 cents a gallon of wort, malt extract and other fluids purchased for use in making home brew. The tax on malt will be 5 cents a pound. The measure was given immediate effect and little doubt exists but that it will be signed and enforced. The yield will be about $2,000,000 annually, which will reduce the property tax accordingly. When the house first passed the measure it called for a tax of 2 cents per pound for dry ingredients and 2 cents per gallon on the extracts.

Final passage of the Lennon death penalty bill, laid a death sentence, for before the governor of this state, for the first time in more than 80 years.

Sen. Peter B. Lennon, Genesee county, author of the measure, secured, by excellent missionary work, the passage of the measure which makes death mandatory following conviction of first degree murder, after conviction has been sustained and upheld by the state supreme court. Rep. John Espie Eagle, was a power of strength for the bill, also judges and jurists would have no discretion once conviction is had.

Other important measures which were passed by the two houses of the legislature included creation of a permanent state commission to study the crime situation; codify criminal laws; the bill calling for the establishment of a state police radio broadcasting station at East Lansing; casting a prohibiting sale or use of fireworks in this state, save at supervised and public exhibitions; new hunting and fishing regulations; a new milk code, a potato grading bill, revision of the criminal code so as to remove liquor offenses from the life penalty provisions of the code; increasing penalties for first offenses against the state's liquor laws; and many individual bills designed for the general purpose of making more difficult the way of the transgressor.

The measure from Rep. James S. McBride, Shiawassee county, calling for the appointment of a commission and endeavor to regulate the price of beans in Michigan, was tabled in the house, on the final day, and there left to expire. Several measures died on the table in both houses, during the session; scores await the governor's signature, or veto.

HENRY FORDS COW

Henry Ford, the man who produced a rattle that grownups could play with and who began the development of rough-riding where Roosevelt left off, now declares that in a few years there will be no such thing as the cud-chewing bovine answering to the name of Cow.

Henry helped put most of the horses out of commission and the natural inference is that he intends to perfect something to take the place of Rosebud and her sisters.

The Detroit miracle man's idea of turning out a Ford that will give milk may be sound, but anybody who has ever ridden in a fliver, will insist what is most needed is a Ford that will give some sort of liniment.

Mr. Ford is very reticent about his Tin Cow, which will retail probably, at $375.00 up, F. O. B. Detroit, complete with the usual set of adders with his cow and deep bass moo-o-o. Our own cow correspondent has secured a Ford catalogue giving plans and specifications for the Ford Cow. They follow:

- Plain water fuel system.
- Millegage: five quarts of milk to a gallon (of water).
- Self-starter for those wishing plain milk.
- Cranking device for those wishing whipped cream.
- Left or right-hand drive as preferred.
- Both hands if you are fast milker.
- Special upholstery, in the usual shades of cowhide.
- Jordan magnet.
- Van Camp carburetor.
- Two horns with each cow.
- Complete tool ket, including hay fork, halter, stool, pail, and switch.
- No oiling necessary except citronella on farms in regions where mosquitoes are apt to annoy the cow.

Models

- The Runabout cow
- The Sedan cow
- The Pouring cow (Mostly Bull)
- The Coupe cow

Notes—Any of these models will give the same amount of milk but it will be possible to get more pails under the touring and sedan models. Ford cow bodies will be so constructed as to make them distinct from all other models. Mr. Ford has perfected a design for a head and neck which will make confusion with the more expensive types of cows impossible. Outside sheath of tin will be of sufficient thickness to make it practically fly proof. This is important as it is very difficult to milk a Ford when it is fidgety and nervous.

GUARANTEE

Each cow will be guaranteed for ninety days. Any cow falling apart before that time will be replaced. Any cow found to have missing parts within that period will be provided with them upon receipt from the cow or owner of the cow.

SPARE PARTS

Spare part will be carried in all Ford service stations and five and ten cent stores. All parts should be replaced as soon as sign of wear is detected. There is nothing more discouraging than to have a herd of cows falling to pieces all over the pasture.

WARNING

To get plain milk drive Ford on smooth road. To get a milk-shake drive at high speed over a unpaved street. To get butter or cheese drive Ford cow over cobble-stone road. What do you think of that? It may be a good idea, and all that, but it's our private opinion that the news of Ford's Tin Cow is mostly Bull. Author, Clyde Super.

PINCKNEY HIGH LOSES

Pinckney high school was defeated by Fowlerville at Fowlerville last Friday by a score of 5 to 1. Pinckney played a good game in the field, only making four misplays but were weak at bat only getting two hits twenty-one of them being strikeouts victims. Reason held Fowlerville to five hits and only one of Fowlerville's runs was earned. Pinckney's lone run was scored in the eighth when Jim Hall was hit by a pitched ball, stole second and third and scored when Basydio hit a two base hit.

Pinckney plays Dexter at Pinckney this week Friday, May 17.

GAMES GOES TEN INNINGS

In a fast and furious game filled with hard hitting Pinckney-Michagammas lost a ten inning thriller here Sunday to the Del Pre team of Ann Arbor by a score of 10 to 11. Pinckney took the lead in the first and held it until the seventh when the visitors scored four runs after two were out on 2 singles, an error and a home run. The home team got two runs in the 7th on singles by Bowman and G. Reason and Brown's triple. They tied the score in the eighth when Doyle singled and scored on Swarthout's hit. Ann Arbor got three more runs in the 9th on three hits and an out at first. Pinckney also got three runs on singles by H. Reason, Bowman and Brown and a wild throw in the tenth inning Judson, first man up for Ann Arbor tripled and scored on an out at first. In the last half of the inning Pinckney was unable to score.

NOTES OF THE GAME

The attendance Sunday was larger than at the preceding game.

Ed Brown led the Pinckney batters with two singles and a triple.

While neither team is credited with many errors, the errors of omission were numerous. Good fielding would have turned both the Ann Arbor homer and triple into outs. A muffed fly later allowed Ann Arbor to tie the score.

Pinckney used two men in a vain effort to win. J. P. Doyle got into the game, still replacing VanBlaricum. He singled and Don Swarthout scored him with a long hit to center. This move made a switch necessary. Doyle went to right and Swarthout caught the last three innings.

Louis Stackable who umpired behind the bat was struck by a foul ball in the seventh and had to have first aid rendered.

Pinckney tried to use Gus Tack as a pinch hitter in the 9th. However Ann Arbor refused to stand for it as he was not in uniform.

WEEK OF MAY 12

The cool temperatures of the latter part of last week will run over into the very beginning of this. However, this cool weather will soon give way to another rise in temperature that will be ushered in by another low pressure area.

With this storm center, due in Michigan about Monday or Tuesday, there will be scattered rains and thunder storms. There will also be some rather strong winds, if not actual tornadoes, during or close to the middle part of this week.

While we are not looking for any radical changes in the temperature toward the end of this week, we believe the readings will gradually get lower and lower until by the end of the week they will be about seasonal. In fact, by Saturday temperatures will be slightly below the mean reading of 58 degrees for the central counties of the state.

Best Days This Week

For farming: May 16 and 17; 7 to 9 a. m. and 2:30 to 5 p. m.
For fishing: May 12 and 13.
For baking: May 12 and 13.
Set ducks, geese and turkeys: May 15 to 18.

Waterliet Concern Back on "Slow" Time

The Waterliet Paper Co., operating large paper mills in Waterliet, returned its force of more than 400 employes to standard time working hours. The company put the so-called "daylight saving" time in effect recently, but in deference to the wishes of the city commission and other business interests of the city, William Loveland of Kalamazoo, president, ordered a return to standard time.

The office force will continue to work on the fast time schedule as nearly all the towns and cities in which its customers are located are on daylight saving time in the summer.

JACK and JILL

By CLIFFORD WEBB

(Copyright, 1924, the Central Press Association, Inc.)

That Nita Ravelle instantly recognized her, Jill was positive, although the other had given no sign.

For a moment or so, a sort of blind, senseless rage surged up in the heart of Jill Stuart. The very devil of murder, the demons of the red homicide squad, shrieked in her brain—screamed at her to kill, to kill! Oh, what a silly fool she had been! Why hadn't she brought the pistol?

Then, like a fade-out on a motion picture screen, the homicidal paroxysm passed. But it left her with the definite certainty of what she would have done in that awful moment of frenzy, had she possessed the means, and she sent up a prayer of thanksgiving to the power that had moved her to put it back. After another think too much. I wonder now if she would—

"Oh, Jill!" she exclaimed, affecting an enthusiasm she was far from feeling, "let's buy some chips and try our luck at roulette! If you haven't any money with you I'll lend you some. What d'yuh say?"

Jill answered with a little raise of the right shoulder, a characteristic motion of natural inheritance and one that might signify almost anything. In this instance it indicated acquiescence.

"I don't care," she said, a strained note in her voice that betrayed still more the fight she was making to hold herself in check.

"But I've got money," she added, quickly. "All I want to lose, anyhow."

Oh, Jill—you lucky devil!" squealed Mike.

moment, when she had more fully recovered control of herself, she turned to Mike.

"Don't look around yet. But—they're here! At the fifth table on your right. She's looking this way, and has seen me, I know. What'll we do, Mike? I don't want to engage in any scene, and yet I know if I got near that woman I'd tear her eyes out. Oh!"

She gripped her fingers in her lap until the knuckles cracked, and fought the battle out once more—through sheer force of will power. In another minute she was calm again. But she wasn't sure she could trust herself even yet.

Mike, in the meantime, had taken a casual survey of the tables, and she, too, encountered the gaze of the wife robber. She glanced at Jill, noted the composure she had acquired, and nodded approval.

"You're a game scout, Jill, dear!" she said impulsively, but in a low tone, just loud enough for the other to hear. "Keep it up. Don't give the nasty vampire the satisfaction of knowing she's hurt you. As for Jack Stuart—I'm awfully surprised and disappointed in him. I didn't think he'd fall for Nita Ravelle. But—well, dear, what do you want to do?"

"Let us—" Jill turned to Le Tarte, sitting across the table from her. "Are women allowed in the gambling room?" she asked.

"Certainly," he replied, a little surprised at her question. "A big part of the joint's patronage is made up of women players—especially at roulette." He leaned over toward her in a confidential manner.

"You've seen them already, haven't you?" he asked, eyeing her curiously.

"Yes," she replied with perfect calm, "I've seen them. Now I want to get out of here for awhile. I don't think I shall speak to him in here. But I'd like to go into the gambling room."

Her decision and proposal fitted into his instructions to keep her from speaking to, or being seen by, her husband.

"All right," he said, briefly, pushing back his chair and rising at once. "If you want to go in, I'll take you, 'C'mon!"

Without another glance toward the woman she hated, Jill rose and with Mike, followed their escort out through a door at the rear, into a long passageway. Like the other, this led into a court. From this they were ushered through a hall into the main gambling room.

No pains had been spared in giving the Casino all the attractive lure that glitters and brilliant colors give to a gambling establishment. Splendid paintings in frames of gold and silver set in white and black satin covered the walls. Luxury abounded on every side. Ostentation, sparkle and show, to fascinate the eye and hypnotize the senses.

Mike gave vent to a little sigh of relief at the inference of the words. Surely Jill couldn't be feeling so awfully desperate, she thought, if she could give consideration to the loss of a few dollars.

"All right, then," she chirped brightly. "We'll lay our sacrifices on the altar of the Blind Goddess and bend the knee of Lady Luck! Coming along, professor?"

"Oh, I might shoot a buck or two," replied their escort, with a carefully cultivated nonchalance.

The roulette wheel, at the moment of their approach, was being patronized by a small coterie of men and women and a couple of flappers—"nickle shooters," evidently, the pest of the gaming table.

Mike laid down two $10 bills. "Ten blues and twenty reds, mam'selle," said the man behind, with a poor imitation of French, as he pushed the stated number of checks across to her.

"I'll take 'th' same," said Jill, and laid down a $20 bill. The professor looked on.

As the croupier spun the little ball, Mike placed a blue check on each of three numbers—7, 14 and 21. Jill put five blues on 17.

Clickety-click, rattled the little ball as it hopped its way along on the running board of the wheel, turning steadily on its ball-bearing axis in the opposite direction. Gradually losing its momentum, it began to drop into the pockets, tumble out, and drop into another, until finally, its force spent, it fell into a pocket and stayed there.

"Seventeen—wins on the black!" announced the croupier, a faint emphasis on the verb, as though he were surprised. Then he added, enunciating the numbers with a round, distinct utterance, "thirty-five times five—one hundred and seventy-five dollars!"

Then he raked in all the other checks on the table save those of the nickle shooters, who were down on the black for ten money, after which he pushed across the green cloth to Jill her winnings—$5 yellow checks, each representing $5, and her bet of five $1 checks.

A deep silence, oppressive almost, had hung over the small assemblage of players from the instant the croupier had announced the winning number until he made the pay-off. That broke the spell.

"Oh, Jill, you lucky devil!" squealed Mike, as she threw her right arm around the other's waist and gave her an impulsive hug. "One hundred and seventy-five plunkers! Yuh musta had a hunda hunda!" She turned with a new challenge to the croupier.

"Spin 'em again, Mister Good-Looking! I gotta 'win a million dollars 'n'ight!"

But she didn't win a cent on that turn—she lost. Three blue checks and five red ones went to the house from her stack, while Jill, bold with so many yellow chips before her, lost $50 on the roll. The professor won 50 cents.

On the next spin Jill distributed seven yellow chips around on seven different numbers. Mike laid three on 17. The little ball shot out.

Around and around the wheel kept turning. The little ball kept running until it had run its course, when it dropped into a pocket, rolled out, and then dropped in again and stayed there.

"Double O!" droned the laconic voice of the croupier as he raked in the checks. Everybody took a long breath and heaved a sigh. The house had won again!

"Oh!" said Jill, surprised. They always are when the double O wins—for it wins so often! Mike said "Blame it"—just like that. But she said it with such a naive air as to call forth hearty laughter. Again the croupier picked up the little ball and snapped it on its journey.

"Oh, dear—what'll I play?" shouted Mike, and then slapped "three reds on 17" again. It had won for Jill, why couldn't it win for her? Jill scooped up a handful of yellows, shut her eyes tight, and pushed them out on the board in the block of numbers. When she opened her eyes she saw that Chance had guided her hand to release the stack of nine checks on No. 23.

"Skiddoo!" she wailed, and registered complete hopelessness.

"Yuh niver kin till," consoled Mike with a "foine" accent, her eyes trying to keep up with the eccentricities of the tricky little ball. "Yuh niver kin—" Then the little ball dropped, hepped up, and then hopped back again into pocket—No. 23!

"Twenty-three wins—on 'th' red!" barked the croupier, and then growled out the remainder—"thirty-five times nine—three hundred and fifteen dollars!"

"Well, if you aren't the luckiest giblets!" yipped Mike—and threw her arms around the lucky one's neck. "Tell me!" she demanded, fiercely, "how d'yuh get this way?"

CHAPTER XI.

Then, even as she was giving thanks to the gods of luck that were keeping Jill's thoughts away from her troubles, Professor LeTarte, either with malice aforethought or in his attempt to be witty, gave utterance to the silly remark that "who's lucky in gambling is unlucky in love."

"You stupid!" hissed Mike, whirling on him as if she meant to scratch his eyes out or bite off an ear at least, "what d'yuh wanta do—start something? Or is it that you think you're clever?"

"Oh—LeTarte didn't mean to hurt me, Mike," interposed Jill, with a friendliness of tone and a smile that embraced both of them, "it was just that he misquoted 'th' thing, that's all. 'C'mon, get back in 'th' game and keep it hot. We're gonna break 'th' bank! Here, professor, I'll stake you. Try your luck with these!" She dropped five of the yellow checks in his hand!

Mike looked at the woman she had once derided as a piker, and her eyes grew dim with a hazy mist. "I'm beginning to understand what Father Pat meant," she said to nobody in particular, "when he told Dad and I that the poor people of Elliston would be a happy lot if Jill Stuart had a pocketbook half the size of her heart!"

Jack Stuart cast a bored glance out over the assemblage of darilyly gowned women and girls and their escorts, some of whom were garbed in dinner garments, but the majority, like himself, wearing business clothes.

The scene held no interest for him that night. He wanted to get back home with Jill and the kids. His gaze came back to his table companion.

"If you could tell me, Nita," he said, speaking in all seriousness, "who it was that gave me that bum steer about Tony, I'd rise up and call you blessed! I'm sure I never heard his voice before. And you're sure that you spoke with Tony himself?"

"I spoke directly to him and he answered me," replied Nita Ravelle, with perfect candor and truth. "He was in Fanny Tennant's apartment, which, as you know, is just across the hall from mine in the Hirsch block. Fan and Jessie Barnes were there and so was Eddie Baker and Jim Blake. You know both their voices, so I couldn't have been either Jim or Eddie."

Besides, Jim has told you he wasn't him. But I know Tony had no intention of leaving Fanny's for at least two hours, for he said so. It was 5 o'clock when Jim and I left to come out here."

"Well," said Jack, with sudden decision, as he looked at his watch, "it's 7:30. I'm going home!"

"But Jack!" exclaimed Nita, protestingly. "What am I going to do? I can't take a chance riding back to town with Jim Blake, intoxicated as he is. And he wouldn't let me drive—you know how he is. Oh, here he comes now! I'm going to tell him you're taking me home!"

Before he could make any reply to her announcement the subject of their discussion—or hers, rather—a young, heavy-set man with bulbous nose indicative of a chummy acquaintance with bootleggers, reeled up to their table, caught its edge with both hands, and then dropped into a vacant chair. Almost immediately his head fell over on one side and he was snoring.

The girl looked at the sprawling figure, her mouth curling with disgust. "Any man who'll allow himself to get as drunk as that has no right to take a woman to a place like this," she asserted, with a righteous indignation none could deny. "You don't mind, do you, Jack, if I ride with you? I'd walk before I'd ride with a thing like that!"

He laughed, but it was a forced laugh. He did not, as a matter of truth, favor the idea of Nita Ravelle riding with him back to Elliston. He didn't like to think of Jill hearing about it, as she was sure to do. There seemed, however, no logical way to avoid it in the face of her request, so he might as well make the best of it, he decided.

"Why, certainly, Nita," he assured her, trying to inject as much cordiality into his tone as possible, "you know you're perfectly welcome, so far as I'm concerned. It's only 'th' chance that he—" nodding toward the sleeping Blake—"might be a bit miffed."

Her pretty lips curled contemptuously. "What a lot I care, how miffed Jim Blake gets because I refuse to ride with him when he's so drunk he goes to sleep in a place like this. I'd walk home forty times before I rode along that gorge in a car driven by Jim Blake when he's drunk. I'm not ready to die just yet!"

"Well, then, we might as well be on our way, I suppose," said Jack. He was suddenly eager, anxious to see Jill and the children. Since their reconciliation Jill had seemed dearer than ever before.

"I'll get my coat and hat and meet you at the door," said Nita, rising. "It's just as well that everybody doesn't know we go out together. People will talk. And I realize you've got a wife to think of, Jack."

He nodded, grateful to her for her consideration. Blake had paid the check for Nita's and his dinner, so there was nothing to hold them. They had been sitting at the table when Jack passed and Nita had called him.

"He didn't seem to be drunk then," mused Jack, as he glanced at the recumbent figure. "He must have hit 'em up pretty fast in 'th' last half hour."

If Jack Stuart could have seen the remarkable rapidity with which Jim Blake sobered up as soon as he had made certain of Jack's and Nita's departure it might have started him to guessing.

"I've noticed it before in Jim," said Nita, talking almost at random, and with an odd catch in her breath. "He always seems to get sleepy after he's taken four or five drinks. Where is your car parked?" She put the question abruptly.

"Over in 'th' west corner of 'th' shed," he replied. "It's not our own car, Jill had that, so I had to rent one."

"Blake is driving Eddie Baker's car," she said, in the manner of one talking just to keep up the conversation—or to keep the listener's attention. "Is it a fivver you've got, or a regular car?"

"Oh, it's a good car," replied Jack. "Better, really, than our own, and much faster. Ah, here we are now. Wait till I—"

The "Ah" was jerked out of him it might almost be said, by the very look, when a powerful spotlight flashed suddenly full in his eyes. Then:

"Put up yer 'ands—bot o' yuh!" came the sharp command in a snappy, metallic tone that wavered not nor did it brook delay. Jack Stuart waited not for any repeated order. He "put 'em up." A quickly stifled scream broke from Nita Ravelle.

"Shut up, woman!" barked the voice behind the spotlight, and a huge automatic showed its menacing muzzle within the light's focus for an instant. "One more squawk outta you and—" The muttered threat carried a double-barreled suggestion of horrible possibilities.

"Frisk 'em, Pete—bot' of 'em!" came the next command, and a second figure, heavily armed and masked, stepped forward to execute orders.

"Never mind 'th' jack now—see if either's gotta rod!"

With his hands high above his head, Jack Stuart underwent the first real "frisking" of his life. It consisted of a quick running of hands over his pockets.

When nothing in the shape of a gun was found, the frisker turned his attention to the woman. As the light was shining directly in his own eyes, and she was in the rear of him, Jack could not witness the "indignity" to which she was subjected. Whatever its nature, it was exceedingly brief.

"Now, you two, climb into the car there an' sit tight on the back seat. You're goin' fer a ride. Step lively, now!"

Looking into the frowning mouth of that huge automatic, the muzzle of which looked as big to Jack as that of a coast defense gun, he felt that discretion, under the circumstances, was by far the best part of valor. He stepped lively.

His companion, evidently, had stepped even livelier, for she was inside and seated when he arrived.

"Oh, Jack!" she whispered, tremulously, "they won't murder us, will they?"

"I don't—I hope not!" he said, and very soon he felt it fervently. But life was very uncertain at best, he'd heard say.

The man with the spotlight and gun squeezed into the small space in front of them, closed the door, and snapped out his light. The other fellow had taken the driver's seat. An instant later the car shot out from under the shed and turned toward the road.

"Would you—er—mind telling where you are—ah—taking us, mister?" queried Jack, with natural curiosity.

"Don't you ever tell, bo, for it's a secret!" came the quick, snappy answer. "You're goin' fer a leetle ride 's I told yuh! You don't know where— but yer on yer way An' now be still, fer I gotta 'ink!"

It occurred to Jack that his own thinking apparatus, the machinery that usually ground out the regular gist, must be dust-clogged or rust-clotted. Nothing seemed to function correctly, to synchronize in the customarily prescribed manner. All that he could center on was: "They were going somewhere—but they didn't know where?"

FERRIS NOT TO CHANGE POLICY

The future policy of Ferris institute, a matter of statewide interest since the death of President Gerrit Masselink, was clarified by a statement from Bert S. Travis, secretary of the school.

Travis emphasized that the aims and ideals of the late Senator Woodbridge N. Ferris and Gerrit Masselink will be carried on in the future and that there will be no change in the working status of the school.

"The selection of a new president will be made with great care and deliberation," Travis said. "No undue haste will be made in such a selection, although it is desired that one shall be chosen to begin his work by September," he added.

The management of the school in the meantime will be assumed by Mr. Travis, assisted by an advisory board of faculty members.

Mrs. Lavina Masselink, widow of the president, will continue to represent the Masselink interests on the corporation board of the institute. Other members of this board are Mr. and Mrs. Bert Travis, E. M. Clark and Charles H. Bender, of Grand Rapids, representing the Ferris estate.

In a statement issued by Mrs. Masselink, in speaking of a successor to her husband, suggested the selection of a "man of high ideals, a man of judgment and executive power, a man cognizant with the history of the school, qualified to carry the torch and continue the work of expansion that now is actively under way."

Plan $2,000,000 Temple

Plans for one of the finest Elks temples in the United States, to be erected by the Detroit Elks on East Jefferson avenue opposite Seminole avenue, have been approved. It will be the equivalent of a ten-story structure, 100 feet wide and 190 feet deep. The cost of the building and equipment will be nearly $2,000,000. Construction is expected to start about May 1. Malcomson and Higginbotham, Detroit, are the architects.

A swimming pool, gymnasium, billiard room, bowling alleys and shower room will be provided in addition to lounges and lodge rooms. The dining room will seat approximately 1,000 persons, and the main auditorium about 1,700.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur a few hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

SPEAKING OF AIR TRAGEDIES—

Metal-clad Dirigible Nears Inflation Stage

The experimental metal-clad airship, under construction for the department of the navy by the Aircraft Development Corporation, Detroit, will be inflated and ready probably in July or August for flight trials, it was stated at the Bureau of Aeronautics on the basis of reports from the corporation.

The airship, an experimental type, has been building three years, although the contract period was originally estimated at about one year. Reports from the corporation at Detroit are to the effect that the dirigible will be ready for inflation within the next two months. Flight trials, it was stated, will be considered after the inflation is complete.

"This is a 200,000 cubic-foot volume aircraft embodying the novel feature of having the envelope constructed of thin metal instead of fabric," said Commander Garland Fulton, in charge of the lighter-than-air section of the bureau.

"It is regarded by the navy department as distinctly an experimental type, and no prediction as to the outcome of the experiment is possible at this time. Nor is it likely that any conclusions can be drawn after the ship has had a considerable amount of flying time.

Congress originally authorized $300,000 for construction of the ship and research into the feasibility of metal-clad craft in connection with its building. Of this amount $125,000 has been paid over to the corporation to date. An additional $25,000 is due when the ship is ready for inflation, and the remainder will be payable after successful flight trials.

The metal envelope of the craft is a duralumin composition with thin coatings of aluminum on either side as a protection against corrosion, Commander Fulton explained. In the beginning the contractors started to use pure duralumin in the construction, but became concerned about the durability of these thin sheets. As a result, he said, they resorted to a thicker metal known as "alclad," which is protected by aluminum on either side. Aluminum itself is non-corrosive.

In testimony before the House subcommittee on appropriations, in February, 1928, the chief of the naval bureau of aeronautics, Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, discussed the metal-clad ship. Explaining that the contract for the ship, dated August, 1925, called for delivery in 400 days, or approximately October 1, 1927, Admiral Moffett said that the contract time has twice been extended.

"Difficulties, some foreseen and some unforeseen, have arisen in the construction of the metal-clad airship," he said. "In October, 1927, the contractor put into effect a reorganization and subjected the whole metal-clad project, as it then stood, to very close scrutiny.

"A line of procedure for the future is not yet definitely decided upon. Final decision will be made after certain tests have been completed which are to be conducted in the near future on a section of the hull.

"If those tests justify the contractor in wishing to continue, it is probable that he will scrap all or a major part of the work fabricated to date and start anew, using a different metal for the hull, believed to be more resistant to corrosion.

"To sum up the metal-clad situation: A completion date is indefinite. The success, or non-success of the experiment is problematical, just as it was at the outset. Assuming ultimate success for the present experiment, it will be a number of years before metal-clad airships having performance comparable to that of the contemplated rigid airships can be built."

At the same hearing Commander Fulton testified that the tests mentioned by Admiral Moffett had been held.

"I think the builders of the airship wish to continue the construction, scrapping, however, nearly all parts that have been made up to date and starting anew with a different kind of metal."

The "different kind of metal," he now explains, is that called "alclad."

MICHIGAN THIRD IN AUTO TAXES

Michigan was sixth among the states in automobile registration in 1928 and the third state in amount of registration fees collected, according to a compilation by the Department of Agriculture.

Michigan's registration is 1,249,221 vehicles, her fees total $20,056,848. New York, California, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Illinois all register a greater number of motor vehicles, but only New York and Pennsylvania collect more in fees.

New York with 2,083,942 vehicles, collected $34,306,706. California, the second state in registrations, with 1,799,890 vehicles, collected only $9,292,304. Ohio, the third automobile state with 1,649,699 vehicles, collected $11,840,258. Pennsylvania, the fourth state, with 1,642,207 vehicles, collected $27,113,777.

The total registration of motor vehicles in the United States during 1928 was 24,493,124, a gain of 1,359,883, or 5.9 per cent, over the number registered in 1927. The figures include passenger automobiles, taxis, busses, motor trucks and road tractors. In addition 148,169 trailers and 117,946 motorcycles were registered.

In percentage gain, Arizona ranks first with 16 per cent. The District of Columbia is second with 13 per cent. Mississippi and South Dakota each report a gain of 12 per cent; New Mexico, Alabama and Connecticut report 10 per cent; Tennessee and Texas report 9 per cent, and South Carolina, Vermont, Wyoming, North Dakota, Michigan and Delaware report 8 per cent.

Comparison of the registration total with the 1928 estimated population of 120,013,000 indicates that there is now one motor vehicle for every five persons in the United States; or one for every family.

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic purges and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

TURTLE BLOOD USED TO FIGHT DISEASE

Even turtles are yielding their bit to science. Every year the University hospital uses the blood of over a hundred turtles in its laboratories. This blood is centrifuged and the serum, when mixed with beef broth, is used as a medium for tuberculosis and diphtheria cultures.

Herr Johann J. Herrman of the University clinical laboratories, known as "Yost" throughout the hospital, does this interesting work. Almost every Saturday afternoon he can be seen along the banks of the Huron river, probe in hand, searching for turtles. The turtles are buried about two feet in the mud, and by means of a combination steel and wooden probe, they can be located and pulled forth from their hiding places. These turtles are from two to fifty years old, and some of them weigh between thirty and forty pounds.

Herr Herrman is also interested in the life, habits and kinds of turtles which live in the Huron river. Some he has found can exist without food for three months. The two most common kinds that he has found are the snapping turtle and the mud turtles, although there are two other kinds which are prevalent. The shells he soaks in formaldehyde to harden them, and then shellsacs them and makes them into wall vases, ash trays and paper weights.

Genesee Creates Park Department

The Genesee county board of supervisors, at the closing session, created a Park Department upon recommendation of the road committee. A fund of $10,000 was made available, being taken from the road maintenance fund, to be used in beautifying the highways in the county. Many places, where the road commissioners were forced to buy strips of land to make a wide corner, or to avoid curves have been left to grow up to weeds and are very unsightly. These places will be cleaned up and trees planted and an effort made to have the highways present a pleasing appearance to the motorist.

It is hoped that there will be parks created, one of which, possibly will be at the Flint river, west of Clio, known as "Berry's Grove," which, with a very little expenditure, could be transformed into an ideal summer park.

The Genesee County Wild Flower Roadside and Garden Club recently announced that a prize would be awarded to the person displaying the largest collection of burdock burrs at the Davison fair this fall. Burdocks are one of the most common and prolific weeds, and are very difficult to get rid of.

Administers Huge Fund

Announcement is made of the appointment of the Detroit and Security Trust company of Detroit, as agent for the seven individual trustees of the Children's Fund of Michigan, a $10,000,000 trust fund just established by Senator James Couzens of Michigan. The gift is "to promote the health, welfare, happiness and development of the children of the state of Michigan primarily, and elsewhere in the world."

The trustees, besides Senator Couzens, are Dr. Hugo A. Freund, who will be president of the Children's Fund of Michigan corporation; Frank Couzens, son of the senator, who will be vice president; McPherson Browning, president of the Detroit and Security Trust company, treasurer; William J. Norton, executive secretary of the Detroit Community Fund, secretary; Clarence E. Wilcox and Judge Arthur J. Lacy, attorneys.

Michigan Forest Nursery Swamped By Orders for Trees

At this season the forest nursery station operated by the conservation department at Higgins lake is busy filling private orders for nursery stocks. To date 282,000 trees have been shipped to those wishing to make plantings on their lands. The majority of such plantings is for the purpose of increasing the attractiveness of private lands, while others are for windbreaks.

PLAN COACHING COURSE AT U. M.

The intramural sports building will be available to all enrolled in the summer school.

A comprehensive program of intramural activities will be supervised by Mr. Washke, assistant director of intramural athletics. This program will include tennis, swimming, baseball, playground ball, golf, hand ball, squash racquets and similar games.

Bronson Men to Make Sea Trip in 26-Foot Craft

An attempt to cross the Atlantic ocean in a home-made, 26-foot launch will be made this summer by five Bronson men.

That seems to be a far-fetched scheme to be developed in this little land-locked village, but the finishing touches were placed on the little craft last week in a dingy barn here and tests will be made on Lake Michigan this week when the boat is driven from St. Joseph to Milwaukee to be exhibited at the Milwaukee Motor Boat show.

The "Karf," a two-ton craft powered by a six-cylinder motor and an auxiliary sail, will set out on the Great Lakes from Toledo, O., June 1, barring accident, and aboard will be its crew of five, captained by Joseph Leppich, 31, a German ex-soldier. The others will be Conrad Kapatke, 21, Henry Schnitzler, 23; Rudy Bantje, 21, and Howard Sowers, 20.

The idea originated with Leppich, who has been in this country only a few years. He built the "Karf" last year and made tests on the Great Lakes with a four-cylinder motor. A large power plant, however, was deemed necessary and a six-cylinder motor was purchased and installed.

"We took the 'Karf' out in severe storm on Lake Michigan last year," Leppich said, "and it stood up staunchly under every test. I feel confident our ocean voyage will be a success."

Parents of Leppich, Kapatke and Schnitzler all live in Silesia, Germany.

MRS. SARAH WILSON

Sarah Bullis Wilson died suddenly at her home in Putnam, Thursday afternoon, May 9, 1929 from an attack of apoplexy. Mrs. Wilson was the wife of Albert G. Wilson who died July 5, 1921. For the past eight years Mrs. Wilson has maintained her home as a matter of personal satisfaction although she occupied it only during the summer months. Early in the past month she had returned and reopened the house. She was preparing to spend the summer as usual, when she was suddenly stricken. Thus was brought to a close a busy, fruitful, and significant life, full of accomplishment and made happy by the appreciation of kindred and friends. She has been known widely for her active, vigorous interest in the old neighborhood, and in the sound logic of life which she exemplified.

Mrs. Wilson was the daughter of Charles Edward and Jane Carr Bullis. She was born June 19, 1852, in a log cabin on the farm still occupied by her brother, Charles E. Bullis, in Unadilla township. There she grew to young womanhood amid the challenging times of a pioneer era.

October 14, 1863 at the age of sixteen she married Albert G. Wilson. A year later the young couple established their home on the farm in Marble's plains where they lived 43 years, that were crowded with the responsibilities of raising a family, and with the happiness of achievement. In 1913, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson no longer young, sought a less strenuous life by moving to the home from which both have now passed away. It is a striking fact that throughout the 52 years of married life the husband and wife were never separated a total of two weeks.

Mrs. Wilson was the mother of five children: Laura Wilson, Howlett of Howell; Dr. Norman D. Wilson of Jackson; Mollie E. Wilson, and Samuel Wilson of New York City and Lucius E. Wilson of Chicago. All the family were in attendance at the funeral. There were twelve grandchildren and one great grandchild. Two brothers of Mrs. Wilson, Charles E. Bullis and George D. Bullis and three sisters, Mrs. Milton Wasson, Mrs. Arthur A. Montague, and Mrs. F. E. Montague, are living in the county.

The death of Mrs. Wilson marks another step in the passing of a generation of pioneers who built a neighborhood and, in so doing, laid a portion of the foundation of a state. Very few of that courageous generation of settlers are left. Mrs. Louis Marble, Mrs. Alice Hoff, Mrs. Julia Pangborn, and Mrs. Gertrude Eaman are the only remaining members of a circle of women who were neighbors and young matrons in a new country, at a time when character and resolution were the foundations of life.

Services were conducted from the home by Rev. Lincoln Ostrander of Owosso, a former pastor, at 2:30 p.m. Sunday.

Following the funeral the interment was at Sprout cemetery near Anderson. There in the family lot amid the graves of old friends, Mrs. Sarah Wilson was laid to rest.

Mr. and Mrs. Jay Shehan and wife of Rochester spent the week with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Shehan.
