PICNIC IS A BIG SUCCESS

St. Mary's Annual Picnic Held Here Tuesday. Largely Attended. Rain Fall at 3:00 Curtails It Slightly

Notwithstanding threatening clouds a large number of people attended the annual picnic given here by St. Mary's Church. About noon the weather cleared up and the dinner table in the woods were quickly filled and refilled several times. The usual chicken dinner was served by the ladies of the parish to which the diners did ample justice. It is estimated that about half of those who attended the picnic were former residents. Detroit as usual contributed the largest number of ex-Pinckney residents. At the conclusion of the dinner the crowd spent several hours in renewing old friendships and patronizing the booths. The Allen boys, Jay and Henry, of Indiana, brought their quotts with them all the way from Indiana and took on all comers in defense of the Indiana state title. The rainfall at 3:00 broke up the doings at the grove. It cleared up about 4:00 and the crowd betook themselves to the ball game and saw Pinckney win from Harry German's Northville team by a score of 7 to 6 in a thrilling 9th inning finish. In the evening the dance at the Pinckney Community Hall was attended by over 100 couples. Taken all in all it was another marked success and the St. Mary's parish should be given immense credit for the manner in which it was put on.

PINCKNEY MICHIGAMME BEAT NORTHVILLE 7 TO 6

Brown's Hit in the 9th Inning Secured Howlett From Third with Winning Run. Harry German Pitches Good Game

For the second time in three days the Pinckney-Michigamme base ball team put on a ninth inning rally and took a game from Northville by the same score as the Sunday game, 7 to 6. A heavy downpour of rain which fell at 3:00 delayed the game for half an hour. Northville scored in the first on an error and two hits. Pinckney got 4 runs in the second when Howlett singled, Lee walked, Moran forced Lee at second, Brown singled, scoring Howlett and Moran and scored on Tomion's hit. Northville got two runs in the third on singles by L. German, Spencer and Catherman. They tied the score in the fifth when Spencer singled and Wolf doubled. In the seventh Northville got a two run lead when Moran walked. L. German and Spencer and Wolf scored them with a hit. Pinckney scored once in the 7th when Mulvaney singled and scored on Howlett's hit. They tied the score in the 8th when Moran got a hit and scored on Tomion's single. Moran held Northville scoreless in the 8th and 9th innings. In the last of the ninth Kuhn first up for Pinckney was out short-stop to first. Howlett walked, Lee singled over second, Moran was out nitcher to first, Brown drove a screamer to short which Wood knocked down but could not field and Howlett scored the winning run.

The Ford was completely demolished and the Hudson was badly lacerated and his wife had eight ribs broken. The others were badly bruised and cut. All were taken to the McPherson hospital, Howell. A CORRECTION

We wish to make a correction in the obituary of the late Freeman Allison published in this paper last week. It was stated that Mr. Allison was a candidate for the legislature but was defeated by George Coleman. This is wrong. Mr. Allison was nominated by the Democrats in 1898 and elected by a good majority. His Republican opponent was J. B. Tasman of Oak Grove. Freeman Allison served with credit in the legislature of 1898-99. In 1900 he was defeated for renomination by L. C. Kanouse of Cohoctah who also defeated Tasman in the November election. George Coleman of Marion was also a Democrat and served in the legislature at another period.

COTTAGE BURNS

A cottage owned by Mrs. Barbara Tessler at Lakeland which stood just west of the ice house caught fire and burned to the ground Monday morning. It was occupied by a party of campers who were on the lake when the fire started. The first story was of cement blocks and served as a garage. The loss is $3,000 partially covered with insurance.

CONG'L. CHURCH NOTES

Rev. T. N. Jones of Rockford, Ohio a former pastor of the Pinckney Congregational Church will conduct the services next Sunday morning and evening.

WEEK OF AUGUST 18

The opening days of the week of August 18 in most parts of Michigan will see the tail end of a storm influence including winds and rain. Immediately following this storm eddy the temperatures will fall to readings considerably below the seasonal normal. Minimum temperatures for southern half of lower peninsula will read close to 50 to 55 degrees.

The weather will remain generally fair over the middle part of the week. Temperatures will show a rapid moderation about Thursday or Friday, so the end of the week will be warm and threatening.

We hardly expect very severe storminess until the very end of this week or very beginning of next, but there may be cloudiness, some wind and perhaps showers leading up to the real crisis of next Sunday or Monday.

Best Time This Week

- For farming—August 21 and 22, 10 a. m. to 12:30 p. m.
- For fishing—August 21 and 22.
- For baking—August 23 and 24.
- For setting fowls—All week.
- For setting ducks, geese and turkeys—August 18, 19 and 20.

Would Make It Even More Difficult for Student Preachers

The board of superintendents of Western Theological seminary is considering two matters covering entrance and graduation of students which, if adopted, may make it more difficult for students to get in and out. In the entrance conditions it is proposed to inquire more fully and completely into the past record of applicants for admission to make sure they have the record, character and proper ability to become ministers of the gospel. A questionnaire may be used before application is made in person.

The other question covers the adoption of some sort of diploma in addition to the professional certificate, permitting the faculty to make a distinction between those who merely are graduated because they have taken the full course and those who not only have completed the course but also may be recommended as preper persons to enter the ministry.

Conditions already required are a degree and diploma from a standard college and a certificate from a church consistory.

"Oh, Darling," he murmured, "I love you so. Please say you'll be mine. I'm not rich like Percival Brown; but, darling, I love you better than life itself. I cannot live without you."

Two soft, snowy white arms stole around his neck, and two ruby lips whispered in his ear:

"And I love you, too, darling; but where's this man, Brown?"

What Will you do

When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria. At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks. Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that baby becomes fretful, or restless, Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

THE QUEEN OF HEARTS

By SEABURY QUINN

"Hot dog!" Williams, the Record's Washington correspondent, entered the office, flinging his overcoat across a chairback. "Look me over old boss; give the Washington contingent's best bet the North-to-South!"

Loomis, of the Clarion-Call, who shared offices, tobacco and everything else possible with the Record's man, looked up from his typewriter with a slightly weary expression.

"Why the exuberance?" he asked, glancing critically at Williams' immaculate evening clothes and silk hat.

"Some finale hopper sit out an extra dance with you?"

"Finale hopper me eye!" indignantly retorted Williams. "This was a princess, a regular, gen-u-ine princess, young fellow me lad. I've been up to the Saxonian Embassy ball, giving the fair ladies and gallant gentlemen the treat of their lives, and her Highness, Princess Marie Hortense de Castellino, danced with me. Boy—" he put his gathered fingers to his lips and wafted a kiss ceilingward—"she was radiant, she was superb, she was divine, she—"

"She was darn footsoore and weary by the time you got through parking your dogs on her royal toes," Loomis cut in.

"Hey, fellers!" Williams called as Moadinger and Bailey, whose offices adjoined the Record's, passed down the corridor after putting their final dispatches to bed. "gather round, I've been telling this here specimen of hoi polloi that Princess Castellino gave me a dance at the Saxonian Embassy to-night, and he's got the brass-bound nerve to be unimpressed."

Moadinger and Bailey grinned through the doorway. "Didn't you get a bid to the ball, old timer?" Bailey asked Loomis.

Loomis' thin cheeks flushed. "Course I did," he replied, "but I couldn't be worried dancing attendance on a flock of princesses without thrones. Why, you poor fish, I pried one of those dames loose from her job once."

"Ya-as, you did!" Moadinger mocked.

"Yes, we did," Loomis answered emphatically. "And what's more, I'm the only man outside the diplomatic corps who knows why Goldovias' still a republic."

"How come?" Moadinger asked.

"Got a cigar?"

"Sure."

"Gimme."

"Not on your innocent young life," Moadinger refused.

"Oh, all right," Loomis answered. "No cigar, no story. Clear out of here, you birds; I'm busy."

He turned to his typewriter and rattled off a line.

"Well," Moadinger sighed as he fished a fat, gold-and-scarlet belted cigar from his waistcoat pocket, "here ya are. Now spill us the dirt on this Goldovian business."

Loomis bit the cigar's end, applied a match and sniffed appreciatively at the aromatic smoke.

"One night last June," he commenced. "I'd just turned into Massachusetts avenue when I spied a familiar figure about ten paces in front of me. The man was in evening clothes, with a long military cloak of black waterproof silk slung over his shoulders. As he passed under a street lamp and turned his head, I caught a glimpse of the aquiline nose and white mustache and imperial of my old friend, Major Sturdevant, of the Secret Service."

"Hey, Major!" I called, "what's the trouble? You're marching like the sergeant major at regimental review."

"Hullo, Loomis," he answered as I caught step with him, "so would you be if you had my job, wised on you."

"What's up?" I asked.

"Why, there's some sort of fool conspiracy on foot to restore the Goldovian monarchy," he said, "and the ambassador's sent in an S. O. S. to the Department; so, of course, your humble servant's got the job of saving the infant republic. In this weather, too, Lord! I'm on the point of resigning, Loomis."

"Suppose I go along and help sweat?" I suggested, for Sturdevant has let me tag along on more than one of his cases.

"Can you act like a diplomatic agent?" he asked.

"Sure," I replied. "How do you do it?"

"Keep your mouth shut and look stupid," he answered.

"Those two things are my long suits," I told him as we rounded Du Point Circle.

"The Goldovian Embassy, in New Hampshire avenue, was seeking like a beehive at swarming time when we knocked at the stained-glass-and-walnut door. Officials in wilted collars and dress clothes that clung to them as if they'd been soured in the river were treading on each other's heels, whispering excitedly together in words that seemed to be all consonants; doors slammed open and shut like jack-in-the-box lids; servants rushing hither and thither with rays of iced drinks and over and through all the hubbub the staccato click, click, clack-click of the chancellery's private telegraph sounded like a pneumatic riveter in street traffic."

"The ambassador sat in his private office, a pile of decoded dispatches before him, a half-burned cigar twitching between the long, smoke-stained fingers of his right hand."

"Your Excellency wished to see me," Sturdevant asked blandly, bowing from the hips in European fashion.

"Yes, yes, M'sieur Sturdevant," the diplomat chattered, mopping his streaming forehead with a silk handkerchief. "Ten thousand devils they have break loose. Zat dam! woman—pardon, her Serene Highness, the Princess Sophia of Goldovia zat was—she have come to these America. Even now she an' her co-conspirators, spy plot, plot, plot ze over 'row of our so glorious republic!"

"Excited as he was, comically as his broken English fell on our ears, we could see the ambassador was a man fired with patriotism. Proscribed for his republican beliefs before the war, the establishment of a representative form of government in his native land had crowned the ambition of his life. That refugee royalty might successfully conspire to re-establish the monarchy had been one of the obsessionary fears of his party since Goldovia's first presidential election; now, the news that a royalist plot was actually in formation had filled him with a mixture of hysterical rage and fear.

"Zey tell me she even now is in New York, surrounded by her accomplices," he hurried on, "an' we are power-less, power-less to stop zem. Can you not do somezing—anny zing—to stop zem, M'sieur Sturdevant?"

"If I can find her Highness and establish the fact that she is conspiring against the government of a friendly country, I think it can be arranged," Sturdevant soothed. "Such a conspiracy constitutes a breach of our federal laws, and as the princess is not an American citizen, we could secure an order for her deportation as an undesirable alien."

"To Goldovia?" the ambassador cried, his eyes lighting with fierce joy as he half rose from his chair.

"Yes, your Excellency, that is the country of her origin."

"To Goldovia." So" He smiled, like one witnessing a pleasing spectacle.

"Your government would imprison her?" Sturdevant asked.

"Oh, but yes, M'sieur Sturdevant," the ambassador replied. He sat suddenly forward, going through the pantomime of aiming and firing a rifle. "A court-martial—the castle courtyard—at sunrise, your state of Virginia says."

"Sturdevant stiffened, glowering at him. 'You'd have me hound a woman to her death?' he asked incredulously."

"M'sieur Sturdevant!" the ambassador rose, striking his desk with his open hand. "Your government has assigned you the protection of a friendly power. The ultimate result of your acts is no affair of yours. Here is a picture and description of the princess—" he handed Sturdevant a small, leather-bound packet. "You have your orders; obey!"

"Sturdevant bowed formally. 'Your Excellency will not find me remiss in the performance of my duties,' he answered. 'But my private opinion is that you're a pack of yellow curs.'"

And before the gaping diplomat could frame a reply, he executed a meticulous about face and marched from the room.

"Sweet little playmate we've got in this game," he remarked as we gained the street. "Let's have a look at this Serene Highness we've got to ship home to be murdered. He opened the little leather folder and held the enclosed photograph up to the street lamp's rays."

"The picture was of a young girl—not more than twenty or twenty-one, at most—whose fair, short hair framed her smiling face in a nimbus of little tight curls. The lips, full and sensitive, curved in a humorous smile, but the wide, light eyes above them were more serious with a questioning, wondering sort of look. A little puzzled and a little wistful, she seemed, as if she dreamed, even in that untroubled time when the picture was made, that men would some day track her down like a brute beast for no other reason than that her father had worn a crown."

"Sturdevant closed the picture frame slowly and put it in his pocket, then turned to me with a stern look. 'Loomis,' he said, 'this game of nations is a rotten one sometimes. I'd rather bear the Rebel yell and see Nate Forrest's cavalry charging any works again than go through with this case.'"

"Why do you do it, then?" I asked.

"Why?" he answered. "Did you say why? Because I've got my orders. A good soldier obeys orders, Loomis, whether an enemy's bayonet or an accusing conscience stabs his heart for it."

"He shrugged his shoulders. 'My memorandum says she's in New York,' he added. 'I might as well be on my way. Are you coming with me?'"

"You bet your Sunday boots," I told him. "Just run by my rooms while I pack a bag."

"We caught the midnight B. & O. for New York."

"As soon as we were ensconced in our room at the hotel next morning, Sturdevant called a number in the Rhinelander exchange."

"Hello; Smith and Company?" he asked when the connection was made. "Mr. Jones of 1069 B. one-six-nine B street, talking." He plucked a silver pencil from his waistcoat pocket and began tapping quickly against the transmitter. "Tap—, tap, tappy-tap, tap, tap, tap," went the pencil a minute or two. He listened, eyes narrowed intently, for a space, struck a few more sharp clicks against the telephone, then continued his interrupted conversation with Smith and Company.

"I'm inquiring about that shipment of goods from Chicago," he said. "What? Hasn't arrived yet? Oh, all right. Thank you. Good-bye."

"I stared at him in hang-jawed amazement. 'What in the world—' I began."

"He cut me off with a grin, anticipating my question."

"One-six-nine-B is my identification number in one branch of the service," he told me. "Smith and Company is the camouflage listing of one of our intelligence bureaus. It might have been an over-elaborate precaution to introduce myself as Jones, then ask them to hold the wire while I tapped a code message in Morse to them and got my answer in the same way; but you can't be too careful, you know. There might be half a dozen busy-bodies plugged in on our line."

"He lighted one of his long, black cigars and puffed vigorously a few seconds. 'Got anything important to do?' he asked. 'There's nothing but routine work for me until dinner. Run up to Bronx Park and take a look at the animals, if you want. I'll meet you here at six o'clock.'

"I knew enough of his methods to recognize the hint, and made myself scarce."

"I hustled back to the hotel as soon as the matinee was over, and found Sturdevant in the final stages of his toilet. His dress clothes were pressed to perfection, across the snowy bosom of his shirt he had drawn a diagonal of scarlet ribbon, about his neck a gold-rimmed monocle dangled by a silken cord."

"Great Scott, Major!" I said, "what's the idea of all the scenery?"

"My boy—" he fixed the monocle in his left eye and bent a piercing stare on me—"you now behold the Count de Lombrozzi. Count de Lombrozzi pro tem, anyway. When you go seeking princesses, you've got to be a count, at least."

"Have you located her?" I asked.

"Perfectly," he replied. "What d'ye think we have intelligence bureaus for? The next thing is to have a look at her. Get into your dress clothes and come along."

"Over in East Twenty-ninth Street, within easy baseball pitch of the grim pile of Bellevue's mortuary, stands a row of reclaimed mansions of an older day. An hour later our taxi threaded its way past parked push carts and noisy first-generation Americans to the entrance of one of these."

"A gray fog was drifting in from the East River, and we felt our way somewhat uncertainly along the mansion's flagstone path with the tips of our walking sticks. Sturdevant seized the polished brass knocker on the door and gave it a resounding thump. No answer being forthcoming, he clattered on the door a second time. A shuffling step responded, and the green door swung open open a few inches, revealing a bearded giant in a blouse of embroidered silk, baggy trousers and high-topped patent leather boots."

Chief Petoskey

A Brief Sketch by His Grand-daughter, Ella Petoskey

I will go back to the days when Michigan was a wilderness to the white man, and a paradise to the Ottawa who roamed unchallenged through its rich forests and over peaceful waters in airy birch bark canoes. The Little Traverse bay region was his summer playground, and his winter quarters were in northern Illinois at the mouth of the Chicago river where the city of Chicago now stands. Every fall the Ottawa made his pilgrimage to this favored spot where he fished in lake and river and hunted in the forest during the moons of frost and snow.

This vicinity was a favorite rendezvous, and it was rich in legend as well as in fish and game. One of the outstanding stories is that a large family of skunks lived in that particular spot for many generations and for obvious reasons monopolized that territory. The Ottawa word for skunk is Chicag, therefore the Indians call the place Chicago, the literal translation meaning Skunktown, and a few years later before the redman realized what was going on a city sprang up in skunktown and the newcomer named his city Chicago. The Ottawa laughed but said nothing.

In the course of time there came to this western country a scion of French nobility whose name was Antoine Carre. He became a fur trader with the John Jacob Astor Fur company and was eventually stationed at Mackinac Island. He married an Ottawa princess and was finally adopted into the tribe and made a chief of the Ottawas to whom he remained true and loyal to his death. He was given the Indian name Neatoshing, which name appears on Ottawa treaties with the United States government. This name appears on treaties concerning Chicago lands claimed by the Ottawas and that have never been finally settled by the government and the city of Chicago.

After having spent the winter in Chicago, in the spring of 1787 Chief Antoine Carre was journeying northward with his royal Indian family and had made camp near the mouth of the Kalamazoo river. One beautiful morning, just as the sun was shining over the tree tops, it shone into the face of a new-born baby boy, a son of Antoine Carre. The father observed the glorious sunshine on the baby's face and said, "His name shall be Petosegay and he shall become a great and influential man." The meaning of Petosegay is Rising Sun, Rays of the Morning Dawn, or Sunbeams of Promise. It is an expression that means a great deal in one word.

The royal family journeyed to the north to the summer camp at what is now known as Seven Mile Point. The young Petosegay grew to manhood and became a fur trader and merchant. He accumulated an unknown amount of wealth and married the daughter of Chief Pokoyegun, the last great chief of the north half of the lower peninsula of Michigan. Chief Pokoyegun reserved what is now Emmet, Charlevoix and Cheboygan counties for his people forever, and when the white representatives of the government came for the chief's signature, they limited the reservation for a period of five years, without the chief's knowledge. When the five years had passed, the white people came in and took possession. This chief is said to have died of a broken heart after he discovered the white man's great deception. Petosegay and his young wife Kee-nayyah, who was later named Mary by the Catholic church, settled at Seven Mile Point, where they lived a while. Then they lived on the place now known as the Otis farm, and later they settled in Harbor Springs. At this place he expected to spend the rest of his life, but other things intervened. At this time he had three sons old enough to go away to school and he sent them to Oberlin College. The Catholic church objected to the idea of sending his sons to a Protestant school. Petosegay could not see the priest's point of view, so he agreed to disagree with him and decided to change his place of residence.

The land across the bay was unoccupied, and Petosegay bought hundreds of acres of land there from the government and paid for it in cash. His first home there was near the mouth of the Bear river and there he lived in peace unmolested by religious creeds for a while. His family consisted of eight sons and two daughters. He probably never visioned the day when his orchards, cornfields, pastures and potato patch would ever be turned into city streets, yet in his old age this very thing happened, and Harbor Springs which he had left behind had long become a busy town. He seemed to have been destined to have towns and cities built wherever he had lived, and his last place of residence bears his name—Petoskey—the city of the Rising Sun as well as of the Million Dollar Sunsets.

Chief Ignatius Petoskey had ten children. They and their children are as follows:

1. Francis Petoskey, dead, married once, has two sons living—The Rev. William Petoskey and Paul Petoskey—they have no descendants.

2. Mitchell Petoskey, dead, married once, one descendant living, a grandson whose name is James Russell, now living in the far west.

3. Lewis Petoskey, dead, married once, one daughter and one son living. The daughter is Mrs. Hattie McNeil of Grand Rapids, formerly of Charlevoix, and she has a daughter and a son who are: Mrs. Belle Steinberg of Iowa (she has no descendants), and Edward McNeil of Pasadena, California—he has on daughter. The son of Lewis Petoskey is Chas. Wm. Petoskey of Milwaukee, Wis. He has a daughter Louise and a son Lewis.

4. Simon Petoskey, dead, married once, no descendants.

5. Mary Petoskey Peterson, dead, no descendants.

6. Joseph Petoskey, dead, married once, daughter and son living. The daughter is Ella Petoskey, the author of this sketch. The son is Cyrellius Petoskey of Lansing; he has seven children. They are Wendell, Violet, Alvah, Lois, Warren, Theodosia and the baby.

7. James Petoskey, dead, married once, four sons living; they are: Howard Petoskey of Lansing, Elliott Petoskey, Brayley Petoskey of Mt. Pleasant, Garland Petoskey of Lansing and a granddaughter living in Cadillac, of school age.

8. Lizzie Petoskey Waukazo, dead, married once, no descendants.

9. Enos Petoskey, dead, married once, one son living who is Huron Petoskey, no descendants.

10. Brazile Petoskey, dead, never married, no descendants.—Michigan History Magazine.

READ, DRIVER AND LIVE!

Who's To Blame?—The motorist must drive his car at all times and in all places under such control that he will not contribute to an accident. That's the law in Michigan.

Speed—Not more than twenty miles in residence districts; 15 miles in business sections, in or out of incorporated towns. Don't allow anyone to dissuade you—It's the law today.

Your Side of the Road—It's unlawful, and may be arrested, if you drive on the left side of the road except in passing after having overtaken another vehicle; then sound your horn before and while passing.

When Someone's Passing—Keep to your own right side; don't increase your speed while he's passing. If you do you violate the statute.

On Hill and Curves—If you can't see whether anyone's coming on the other side of the curve or hill slow down. Also it's unlawful to overtake and pass on such a curve or hill.

The "Stop" Sign—It means STOP. If in following your wrong example someone is killed, what part will you have had in the killing?

Hand Signs—Put out your hand in plenty time before you stop or turn. When turning drive carefully in the direction you intend to take, with your hand out Go Slow!

Right of Way—Having the right of way won't save your life, traffic on trunk lines and "through" streets has priority. At other intersections the car on the right has priority.

Fire Apparatus, Ambulances—Get to the curb, stop, and stay there until they have passed. Following such apparatus closely is prohibited.

Parking Cars—Set brake before leaving car. If headed down grade point front wheels toward curb.

Brake, Lights, Horn—Brake is required, both regular and emergency, capable of stopping in 40 feet at 20 miles per hour. You must have a horn, windshield wiper (rear vision mirror on trucks), muffler, two headlights, 1 red rear light. Headlights must show clearly 200 ft. Headlight glare is prohibited. Main light beams must not rise higher than lamp center and in no case higher than 42 inches above road level at 75 ft. ahead of car. Stop lights must not cast light on left side of road nor more than 100 ft.

Registration, Card and License—Police don't know you. Carry your driver's license and vehicle registration card, or don't drive.

Speed of Trucks—Trucks of gross weight of 18,000 lb., 15 miles per hour; trucks of 8,000 lb., 20 miles per hour; trucks of 5,000 lb., 25 miles per hour; trucks 40 ft. long or more with or without trailers, 20 miles per hour.

Drive Away Rules—New cars en-trant must keep 100 ft. apart on highways.

In Case of Accident—Stop, give your name and address, and get the other fellow's. Report the accident.

Night Parking—Cars parked at night must show white light in front, red light in rear excepting when local ordinance permits otherwise on well lighted streets.

Reckless Driving—"Any person who drives any vehicle upon a highway carelessly and heedlessly in willful wanton disregard of the rights or safety of others, or without due caution and circumspection and at a speed or in a manner so as to endanger any person or property, shall be guilty of reckless driving and upon conviction shall be punished as provided in Section 55 of this act." (Act 318, Public Acts of 1927).

Penalty for Recklessness—"Every person convicted for reckless driving under Section 4 of this act shall be punished by imprisonment in the county or municipal jail for a period of not less than five days nor more than 90 days, or by fine of not less than $25 nor more than $100, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and a second or subsequent offense shall be punished by imprisonment of not less than 10 days nor more than 6 months, or by fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000 or by both such fine and imprisonment." NOTES OF THE GAME

Harry German pitched a very creditable game. With a little tighter support he would have gotten the decision. He has all of the cagyness of an old timer and although hit freely was extremely hard to score on. Cox, Swarthout and Kuhn who like to take a good cut at the ball found him hard to hit.

Northville presented an all-star team by recruiting from Northville, Plymouth, West Point and De. Ho. Co. Vernon Spencer who played center field played with the New York Giants several years ago and was with Buffalo for a number of years. He got 3 hits as did Wolf, a West Point player.

The game was a good one considering the condition of the field. Water stood in spots on the infield. It dried up pretty much before the game ended.

Pinckney came near making a triple play in the 7th. With Spencer on third and Wolfe on first Catherman hit to Howlett who threw to Tomion getting Wolf at second. Tomion threw to Brown getting Catherman at first and Brown threw to Lee and just missed getting Spencer at home by an eyelash.

Howlett made a nice play when he took a ground hit ball back of third which got by Miller and got the man at first.

Kuhn ran in among the automobiles which were parked along the left field foul line and caught Moffits high foul.

Tomion played a nice game handling nine chance without an error.

Hub Lee drew three bases on balls. Moran waved a little in the 7th and walked the first two batters. His teammates came to his assistance with a double play & he came back strong in the last two innings.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Burgess had as Sunday callers Mr. and Mrs. Otto Wagner, Henry Wagner and mother all of Detroit, Mrs. Florence Burns and nephew, Robbie Blisky and Mr. Gene Gould of Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Morgan of Howell.

CURRENT COMMENT

Now is the time of the county fair when our ancestors were wont to make up Buck and Brindle and hasten to the fair. However now the trip is made in the family flier in a fraction of the time it took in the old days. The fair which was originally a place in which to sell farm stock and produce has widened, broadened and extended its area until it takes in most every activity under the sun. The displays run largely to electrical devices for this a mechanical age. There is the usual amount of buffery and fun but not a tenth part of the drunks that was apparent in the old days. The distinguished looking gentleman with the three shell game has long since disappeared but his place has been filled by abler and smoother gentry. The man with the snake collection is still to be seen selling and snakes oil warranted to cure everything under the sun. However it is to be doubted if the crowds have much faith in his goods but patronize him more for his line of chatter and the fact that he is a relic of the past.

It seems almost an impossibility to convict a person of an arson charge if you get enough evidence on him to bind him over for trial. Last spring a fire occurred at Oak Grove which destroyed several business places. Larcenism was suspected and the state fire marshal's dept. and county officers made an exhaustive investigation but nothing followed. The matter was allowed to languish but has been revived again as new evidence is said to have been discovered. The fire marshal spent all one day last week taking evidence at Oak Grove. For some reason juries seem unwilling to convict on an arson charge.

Skirt Rivals the Beach Pajama

By LUCY CLAIRE

There seems to be a difference of opinion among the more exclusive watering places as to the popularity of the pajama mode. At one beach it blossoms out in great profusion, while at another it is scarcely seen at all. In view of its great success at Palm Beach last winter, this is a little surprising. At the Lido Club, near Long Beach, for instance, the pajama mode is at its height, while at Southampton it is but infrequently seen on the Casino beach. When it does appear it is a much more elaborate affair than the pajama costumes we see along the Jersey shore.

Illustrative of this is the very full trousered pajama sketched above, which appeared recently over the July week-end at the Casino beach, Southampton. The blouse is of oyster white crepe with a yoke of black topped by black and white stripes. The motif on the yoke is in pastel shades. The loose trousers are of a bright but light green crepe. With it were worn a big beach hat of oyster white straw and green kid slippers.

In contrast to this, nothing could be simpler than the figured challis pajama, with suspender straps and sun-tan back, which is one of the favorite models at the Edgcliffe Beach Club, Montecito, Cal. The model shown in the sketch is printed in tones of emerald, chartreuse and jade on a cream ground, with the pajama border and suspender straps of the plain jade.

Green clogs were worn with this beach outfit.

Something Different

At first glance it may look like a trend toward the greater modesty of grandmother's day, but it is more apt to be the eternal feminine search for something different that has brought the long skirt to vie with the pajama as a beach costume. It has appeared both at the California beach and at Southampton, though not on the Casino beach at the latter resort. These skirts are very full and very long, fashioned from heavy cotton. The one shown in the sketch was worn at Montecito, and is of figured cretonne with a gay floral design on a white ground. The skirt is designed to slip on over the bathing suit.

The World and All

By CHARLES B. DRISCOLL

ITEMS ABROAD

Two reforms in city construction that I have long advocated I have found already in practice in some European cities.

Several years ago I wrote in the newspapers a suggestion that fire plugs could be made less conspicuous and less dangerous by placing the openings flush with the sidewalk or with the curb, covered by iron plates which could be quickly removed by firemen when making connections.

Fire plugs are the cause of many injuries. They stand at a dangerous height, and they are easily overlooked, especially on a dark night, until they are run into, either by an automobile or by a pedestrian.

In many American cities the widening of sidewalks has left fire plugs standing in the walks three or four feet from the curbs. Persons running for cars or busses at night often run into these obstructions and injure themselves. Besides, the fire plug is an ugly thing wherever you find it.

In London and many other English cities the fire plugs are under the sidewalks, covered by iron grating. In London such plugs are indicated by a fairly conspicuous H painted in black on a white background on the adjoining wall or on a post, if there chances to be one near. This enables firemen to locate the plugs easily. The grating is lifted quickly by any sort of lever, hammer, stick or stone.

In Eastbourne and other English towns the letters F. P. on an iron plate are posted near the hidden fire plugs. F. P., of course, stands for fire plug. H., in London, means hydrant.

Another obstruction can be removed from curb lines by attaching street lights to the sides of buildings. This isn't possible, of course, except where there is a solid row of buildings along the street. I have suggested this in American cities and got myself laughed at for a meddling fellow, always suggesting impractical things.

In the city of Santander, Spain, I saw it beautifully done. There is a wide avenue, nicely parked. The avenue is lighted by strong electric lights, artistically fastened to the building fronts by means of ornamental iron brackets. The brackets extend some distance out from the wall, and the lamp is tipped at just the proper angle so that the light is properly diffused over sidewalk and street. The brackets are so artistic in design and construction that they add to the beauty of the buildings.

Obstructions at the curb are too numerous and unsightly in most cities. If they can be removed altogether the effect is beautiful. Trolley poles are going, as busses are replacing trolley cars almost all over the world. "White way" poles can be removed, too, in many cities, with resulting economy and beauty.

How to Achieve Beauty

By MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

FREQUENT HAIR WASHING NECESSARY IN SUMMER

By Madame Rubinstein

How often should I wash my hair in the summer? This is another question that has come to me often lately. The answer is, you should wash it as often as necessary. That is, as often as it is dirty, a condition that varies with different people under different conditions and climates.

If you are at the beach all summer and swim every day, diving so that your hair is filled with sticky salt, wash your hair daily, after your final swim. Never let your hair remain heavy and thick with salt. Sometimes a brisk, warm shower of fresh water alone, without soap, will prove enough to remove the salt from your hair. But if your shower is not a vigorous one, by all means use a liquid shampoo as well.

Aside from the needs that salt water swimming imposes, your hair needs frequent shampooing all through the summer. Oily hair needs washing oftener than dry hair, and hair that lives in cities needs it oftener than hair in the country. Dust and oils and with the perspiration that is naturally more profuse at this season, crime mingle with the natural scalp and all this accumulation collects on the scalp and hair. Allowed to remain it grows sour and poisons, actually dangerous to hair health. The pores are clogged and their normal action upset. The hair simply must be kept clean.

Once a week is not too often to shampoo in the summer, even if your hair is comparatively dry. In this case use a herbal shampoo prepared for dry scalp, always using an application of warm oil first. After the shampoo, apply a good scalp food or pomade, if your hair is thin and your scalp apparently in need of nourishment.

If your hair is very oily you may wash once a week; twice weekly is sometimes advisable. Once every two weeks, or whenever the hair looks dull and lifeless, apply warm balsam oil before shampooing. A good hair tonic, especially made for oily hair, will tone and normalize the relaxed glands, regulate excretion, promote hair growth and retard grayness.

And whether your hair is dry or oily, brush it. Brush it night and morning to keep it clean and to give the scalp stimulation and exercise. This is as important in the summer as at any other season of the year.

Star Gazing

Hollywood—Quite some time ago this column penned the information that horse opera was due to dwindle away. And this came to pass. Things got so bad for westerns that even Tom Mix, best known of the cowboy heroes, departed from the films.

This state of affairs was brought on by the fact that the smaller houses, the two-bit and dime cinema shops long a fat field for cowboy pictures, suffered a change of heart. Their patrons had finally tired of two-gun drama and wanted a look at Clara Bow, Ronald Colman, Lon Chaney and other non-western film celebrities.

However, once more the tide has seemed to have changed. Indications are that the westerns are due to stage a bit of a comeback.

This is probably due to the fact that with the advent of the talkies actual outdoor scenes have become rare and those souls who like to gaze on beauteous mountains and lakes regardless of what sort of drama is being enacted in the foreground have recreated a demand for westerns which, after all, struck a higher average pictorially than their snootier cinema sisters.

Word comes that Hoot Gibson, one of the better known celluloid gauchos, has just signed a million-dollar contract to make eight talkie westerns which are to differ slightly from the old bang-bang and curse-you-Jack-Dalton type in that they will lean heavily toward comedy drama. Sally Eilers will appear opposite Hoot in his first under the new contract.

Clinch Provides Funds For Orchestra Camp

The National High School orchestra camp has received one of its most appreciated gifts—$2,000 from R. Floyd Clinch.

Mr. Clinch was at dinner with Joseph E. Maddy and several members of the camp faculty Sunday evening at the Hotel Pennington and turned the conversation to the needs of the camp. He asked Mr. Maddy to tell him the camp's greatest need at the moment. Two practice buildings, the camp director replied. Mr. Clinch said he would pay for them.

The two buildings will be started immediately. They will provide quarters for the students to practice individually, as each of the 40-foot buildings will be divided into a number of sound-proof compartments.

Sherbet or Ice Cream. Coffee.
Ices and ice cream—the latter especially—are recommended by doctors for both summer and winter. They must be fresh and pure, of course, but the mother who wants to give her family desserts that will not harm them, but rather help in their growth, had better get a freezer and make creams and sherbets frequently. Here are recipes for some rather unusual creams and a mold.

Orange Sherbet—Three-quarter cup sugar, one-quarter cup water, grated rind one-half orange, one teaspoon gelatin, one tablespoon cold water, one tablespoon lemon juice, one cup orange juice, one egg white, one-half cup evaporated milk. Boil sugar, water and orange rind together two minutes, add gelatin softened in cold water and fruit juices. Chill until the mixture starts to congeal. Then fold into the egg white and evaporated milk which have been whipped together until very light. Freeze.

Orange sherbet may be served in cantaloupe halves.

With peaches and berries—arrange sliced peaches and berries in dessert glasses. Sprinkle over with minced Maraschino cherries. Set in refrigerator until needed. Just before serving fill the glasses with orange sherbet.

Burnt Almond Ice Cream—Two cups evaporated milk, one-half cup sugar, one-half cup burnt almonds, crushed fine. Mix ingredients and freeze.

Apricot Ice Cream—Two cups evaporated milk, two cups apricot pulp, two teaspoons lemon juice, one cup sugar. Mash apricots and put through sieve. Mix apricots and sugar, stirring until sugar is dissolved; add milk; freeze. Peaches can be used instead of the apricots.

Mint Bavarian Mold—One and one-quarter tablespoons gelatin soaked in one-third cup of water, one cup evaporated milk diluted in one cup water, one-half cup sugar, pinch salt, three-quarters teaspoon mint extract, green vegetable coloring, one-half cup evaporated milk. Soak gelatin in cold water five minutes. Scald diluted milk; add sugar and gelatin and stir until dissolved. Add mint extract and enough green coloring to give desired shade. Chill. When starting to congeal, fold in milk that has been properly chilled and whipped until stiff. Line sides of individual mold with chocolate lady fingers. Fill center with mint mixture. Chill until firm. Unmold.

Poems That Live

AIR

(From "The Duenna")

I ne'er could any luster see
In eyes that would not look on me;
I ne'er saw nectar on a lip,
But where my own did hope to sip.
Has the maid who seeks my heart
Cheeks of rose, untouched by art?
I will own the color true
When yielding blushes aid their hue.
Is her hand so soft and pure?
I must press it, to be sure;
Nor can I be certain then,
Till it, grateful, press again.
Must I, with attentive eye,
Watch her heaving bosom sigh?
I will do so, when I see
That heaving bosom sigh for me.

Internal friction generates heat which causes many tires to fail prematurely when subjected to high speeds and heavy loads. Kelly-Springfield Heavy-Duty tires are protected against this trouble because every strand of cord used is impregnated with rubber and the cotton used is the finest long fiber cotton available for the purpose.

That is only one way in which Kelly Heavy Duty tires are protected against premature wear. Every operating factor was taken into consideration when this tire was designed—that is why Kelly Heavy-Duties really do cut operating costs to the bone.

PINCKNEY-MICHIGAMMES BEAT STOCKBRIDGE SUNDAY 7 TO 6

Lee Scores Winning Run in 9th on Miller's Hit After Stockbridge Had Tied Score. Cox and Hollis Hit Home Runs

The Pinckney-Michigamme baseball team took a thriller from Stockbridge here last Sunday by a score of 7 to 6. The game was a seesaw first one team forging ahead and then the other. The climax came in the ninth inning when Stockbridge tied the score 6 to 6 by means of a Pinckney error and a home run by Hollis. Then Pinckney came back strong. Lee singled and stole second, Doyle fled out to center and Miller ended the game with a long hit to right scoring Lee with the winning run. Don Swarthout pitched the first five innings for Pinckney, the score being tied 4 to 4 when he left the box. He kept the hits well scattered and the 2 runs scored in the 5th were the result of a Pinckney error and slow work by the outfield. Moran only allowed 2 hits in the last 2 innings and the two runs scored by Stockbridge in the 9th were due to poor support. Stockbridge scored in the first when Hollis walked and scored on Barkers double. Pinckney tied it in the 4th on Kennedy's double and Lee's triple. Stockbridge scored again in the 4th when Barker tripled and Galligan singled. Barber and Barton also hit safely but Miller made an unassisted double play retiring the side. Pinckney scored 3 in the 4th when Swarthout and Moran were safe on errors and Brown and Lee singled. Stockbridge tied it in the 5th but Cox again put Pinckney in the lead in the 6th with a home run over the center fielders head. They added another in the 7th when Kennedy walked and scored on Miller's hit. Then came the 9th inning finish.

NOTES OF THE GAME
This was the first game Swarthout has pitched this year and he made a creditable showing.

Lee had a big day at bat getting a triple, double, and single in 4 times up.

Cox's home run went over the center fielder's head and rolled several hundred ft. There was not even an attempt made to play on him at the plate.

Stockbridge has a team of youngsters with the exception of Parker and Hollis. The former is from Munith and is a veteran. Galligan, Barton and Stevens all played on the Stockbridge High School team two years ago.

The Pinckney-Michigamme team will play at the Stockbridge home coming on Labor Day, Monday, Sept. 2. Their opponents will be Stockbridge.
