

WEEK OF FEBRUARY 15

The week begins with the temperature falling slowly in Michigan, but remaining close to the seasonal average in most counties. We look for no marked change in the temperature until near the close of the week.

Unsettled and windy weather will occur during the first few days of this week as an aftermath of the storm center passing out of this state at the end of last week.

For one or two days after the middle of this week the weather is expected to be generally fair and much colder.

Probably the most severe storm of the week will occur during the last two days. At that time we believe the barometer will show a more or less rapid downward movement.

Rain or snow will visit most parts of the state during the last two days of this week, coming suddenly and making itself felt through closed or delayed traffic.

Taking the week as a whole in the greater part of Michigan we are of the opinion the weather will show a greater amount of precipitation than is usual.

Those Lucky Pullens!

When Pullen came in, Sam and Julia were busy in the kitchen, working under difficulties. The room was overcrowded with the old dining table, and other odds and ends of furniture that Mrs. Pullen had placed there.

"I don't like that guy," observed Carlile, from the kitchen. "Why, Sam? Mrs. Pullen shook her finger at him. "You're just jealous."

Pullen had straightened himself in his chair. "Say, Elsie, look here!" he began, but she continued more loudly. "Isn't there enough trouble around here, driving me distracted, without this whole neighborhood snickering at you and your infatuation with some girl young enough to be your daughter? Aren't you ashamed having Sam Carlile laughing in his sleeve at you? Aren't you man enough?"

"Sam, have you been making love to girls?" Julia asked. He brushed his hair with an exaggerated gesture of indifference. "I didn't say I'd been making love to THEM," he told her. "You know how the girls are nowadays. Julia—a man doesn't HAVE to do the lovemaking."

Before Pullen had found a satisfactory place to sit, Carlile came in to announce dinner. "There's room for two people on one side of the new table," he said. "Ask Sam." He made a successful re-entrant, while Mrs. Pullen advanced upon the young man.

"You children have got to eat with us," Mrs. Pullen objected, following him to the dining room. "I'd like to see you try it, unless we sit on top of the table," she said. "You go ahead and feed. Julia and I will eat later. It will be nice after eating alone together." He glanced sidelong at the girl.

She smiled. "Unless you can cook better than you do now," she said. "We'll not eat alone together—again." He tried to whisper something in her ear, but she pushed him away. Meantime, Mrs. Pullen had laughed into an account of Mrs. Hamilton's threat against Julia's peace of mind. Pullen listened, frowning.

"I believe gossiping must be a kind of insanity," he commented, when she had finished. "What earthly benefit can it be to her to make other people unhappy?" "It's just one way of finding something to do," Julia said, serving a dish of fried potatoes. "She doesn't have to work very hard at home—she has only a husband to look after—and she wants some excitement, so she goes out and makes it herself."

She retired, slamming the kitchen door behind her. "Attoboy," approved Pullen, with delight. "She won't sleep until she finds out about that blonde."

He shoved her to one side, and hastily mounted the stair without further reply. When the sound of a closing door told that he was in his bedroom, Mrs. Pullen sank to the couch, grasping Julia's hand.

"Julia," she said, her voice shaking and miserable, "do you suppose he knows a blonde?" "I can't tell, mama," said the daughter, her own tone woeful. "If Sam has gone and fallen for some treacherous, scheming girl—"

"Why, I don't think Sam has," said her mother. "It's your father I'm worrying about. Sam wouldn't be deceived by one of these flappers, but your father—why, Julia, the papers are full of middle-aged men falling in love with bathing beauties and women with pasts. They're so! I'll bet she's forty, if she's a day!"

Julia found herself able to take a calmer view of this angle of the case. "I don't believe papa is interested in her at all," said she. "But don't you remember how oddly Sam acted?" She leaned her chin upon her hand, as she thought it over. "What I think is, that papa saw him with this girl and was teasing him about it. And Sam wants to act smart and won't explain."

She stood up suddenly, and shook herself. "I'm not going to let Sam Carlile worry me," she declared. "He can have all the blondes he wants to. I don't care."

Taking up her father's newspaper she sank into his armchair and turned to the advertisements of women's wear. Mrs. Pullen remained on the couch, resting on her elbow, her eyes thoughtfully on the floor.

"and Miss Pullen left the room for a moment. Oh, here she is!" He turned to smile gallantly at the girl, who had appeared behind her mother.

"Mrs. Pullen," he went on, "has just brought word, Miss Pullen, that there isn't any blonde!"

CHAPTER XXXIV Mrs. Pullen gave a startled glance at her daughter. Julia's mouth was pressed into a thin red line.

"It was a joke we had," explained the mother to Parks, who had remained standing. "One of Julia's young men friends and my husband had been talking about a blonde—trying to tease us, you know—and Julia, of course, was furious, so—"

"Mama!" cried the girl. "Why, you WERE furious," Mrs. Pullen insisted. "There's isn't any use in saying you weren't, because you WERE. Young people are so impulsive," she added to Parks. "Don't you think so?"

He made a grimace. "Miss Pullen is impulsive," he said. "Please, Mrs. Pullen, sit down—and you, too," moving, with some difficulty, a chair toward Julia.

The older woman took her seat upon the couch, but the girl obstinately remained standing. After waiting for her a moment or two, Parks resumed his chair.

"I wanted to talk to you both," he said. "That's why I came tonight. I was—I was a trifle impulsive myself the other night, I'm afraid." He looked up at Julia, but she, her eyebrows level and her face unsmiling, directed her gaze straight past him.

Mrs. Pullen reassured him. "We quite understand," said she. "Julia told us about it, of course." "Oh!" the girl said, faintly. "—and you understand that her father and I can't approve, but I'm sure what you did was quite natural, Mr. Parks. It was very natural, indeed," the mother went on. "When Mr. Pullen first called on me, he kissed me the second time—maybe it was the third time—"

"Mama," Julia interrupted. "I think papa's calling you." "Why, no," said Mrs. Pullen. "He isn't. I'd have heard him." She continued placidly. "Young people are naturally affectionate, Mr. Parks. We quite understand that. It would be too bad if they weren't. But Mr. Pullen and I cannot give our consent to your kissing Julia until you are engaged."

with anybody but yourself. I don't know why you come here."

His chest heaved, and he stepped back, sorrowfully. "You hurt me," he said. "You hurt me more than you can understand. But—his gaze brightened and he extended his hand—"Good-night. Perhaps you will think more kindly of me in days to come."

Doubtfully she moved her hand so he could take it, and he clung to her fingers a moment. "Good-night," he said softly. "Good-night."

He crawled across the couch, and collecting his overcoat and hat, opened the door for himself.

"Good-night," he said again. "Good-night, Mr. Parks," called Mrs. Pullen from the head of the stair.

She descended briskly as the latch clicked shut. Her daughter remained in the corner, her head lowered and her hands clasped before her.

"Julia, why did you treat him so terribly?" Mrs. Pullen asked. The girl slowly raised her eyes. "Mama, did your mother try to manage your meetings with young men?" she asked. "Did she decide who you were to be engaged to? Did she talk to the fellows about kissing you?"

Mrs. Pullen stared, as Julia's voice raised.

PROHIBITION LAW VIOLATORS FIFTH

Annual report for January of 1931 shows that 224 persons were arrested for violation of the prohibition law. The total population of the village is 1,483.

The report shows that 224 persons were arrested for violation of the prohibition law. The total population of the village is 1,483.

Another significant fact in the report is that of the 1,483 persons in the village, 1,692 are native born Americans. Seventy-three per cent of the entire enrollment are under 25 years of age and 401 are married men, 41 having been divorced.

Twenty-four and forty-four are first offenders, 31 are World War veterans and one a Spanish-American war veteran. Of the motley group, 214 are negroes, 18 are Indians, and 12 of H-brow extraction. Industry predominates. There are only two former physicians serving patients in the institution, as compared with 506 laborers, 213 farmers, 100 chauffeurs, and 10 musicians.

Wayne county has supplied 472 of the present population. Kent has contributed 148, Muskegon 101 and Genesee 44.

With 116 new inmates admitted in past month and only 60 released the actual count swelled 56. Built originally to accommodate less than 1,200 prisoners, the reformatory now is straggling under a 54 per cent over crowded situation.

STUDENTS TAKE EXTRA STUDIES AT UNIVERSITY

One out of every nine students in the College of Literature, Science and the Arts of the University of Michigan is ambitious enough to attempt more work than allowed by the regular schedule, according to Professor Daniel L. Rich, director of classification. Students in this division of the university are required to file applications for extra hours and 502 have been received, of which the great majority will be granted.

Two types of students usually seek permission to take extra work, states Professor Rich. These are the specially able and interested student who is capable of carrying the work, and the lazy or incompetent upperclassman who finds himself short of required hours as his college career draws to a close, and attempts to make up for lost time in the last semesters. Since permission is given only to those whose records are good, the latter type is seldom allowed to take extra subjects. The majority of the student-given permission to do added academic work make good, failures to carry the extra load usually being due to too much outside work or ill health.

Medicine, engineering and the other professional divisions have schedules which allow for little time for extra scholastic work, and, in cases where it seems advisable, it is permitted on the basis of faculty estimation of the candidate's ability. In the College of Engineering and Architecture extra hours may be taken without permit by students having B grades or better, but only about 15 per cent do so, according to professor Orlan W. Boston, chairman of the committee on hours.

Law school students are allowed little variation in the maximum and minimum hours needed for graduation, but often supplement their scheduled course by "auditing" or attending classes in which they are interested but in which they are not listed for credit. Although they are not held responsible for courses so attended, ambitious students can derive much value from such work, states Professor Paul A. Leidy, secretary of the Law school.

Bronze Kid Shoes

A new fashion note is the bronze kid shoe, which is staging a comeback after several years' absence. It is but natural that this aristocrat should come back without received fashions of greater femininity, especially as its daintiness and chic are unquestioned, and it fits perfectly into the color scheme for afternoon and informal evening wear. It blends beautifully with the coppery browns, greens, light reds and printed fabrics.

Mothercraft

By Mrs. J. S. Goward

A reader takes exception to a recent Mothercraft on musical training for children. He says, "You seem to have overlooked a very important point in presenting the matter—that the object of teaching music is not to make virtuosos."

That's as it should be. But how many parents are willing to consider their children's musical education in this light?

Nine times out of ten it is the parents' fault if a child has to be nagged to practice. We are inclined to take our children's music lessons too seriously.

Is it because we realize what a wealth of enjoyment is in store for persons who appreciate music? Is it because we have our child's future happiness at heart in this? Or is it perhaps because we are paying out good, hard earned money, that makes us so eager for them to get along?

By all means let us teach our children to play a musical instrument. It is a constructive way to teach music appreciation. But there are other methods, too. Not substitutes for piano lessons or violin lessons, but aids to make the study of music more interesting, giving a child the incentive to go willingly to practice instead of being driven or led.

Three and four-year-olds can be prepared for musical training. Why wait until they attend school and time for play is limited?

Mother can play his nursery rhymes on the piano and sing them to him, encouraging him to sing—or better still to beat the rhythms on a toy drum or with two building blocks.

Of course, where the mother isn't musical, phonograph records of folk songs and nursery rhymes can be played for him instead, the point being to direct his sense of rhythm toward music.

Mother should not force the child. She offers this form of diversion to him as a kind of game. They play it together on rainy afternoons or in the evening. And he never sings or performs for company, as this would tend to make him self-conscious, a characteristic which is sometimes never outgrown.

The radio, if used discriminately, can do much to help cultivate a taste for music.

Take him to concerts. In the summer time there are Sunday park concerts which he will enjoy listening to after having had a look in at the animals in the zoo.

WILL DEBATE JOB INSURANCE

Unemployment insurance will be threshed out by college debaters during the winter season, it was determined at a meeting in Lansing last week of the Michigan Debating and Oratorical League. The topic of debate for the league, chosen at the meeting, is: "Resolved, that the several states shall enact legislation providing for compulsory unemployment insurance, to which the employer shall contribute. Constitutionality is waived. All plants employing less than 10 persons shall be exempt from provisions of the law. The term 'contributor' shall mean, contribute in addition to general taxes."

Colleges belonging to the league are: Albion, Alma, Adrian, Calvin, Battle Creek, Detroit City, Hillsdale, Michigan State Normal, Olivet, Central State Teachers, Hope, Western State Teachers, and Michigan State.

Alma Coeds Lead In Freshman Tests

Freshman coeds of Alma college scored a one-sided victory in the freshman tests. All first places were won by women, and Russell Hubbard of Traverse City took the only second place scored by the men with his 55 in the mathematics aptitude test.

Marion Day of Saginaw won mathematics honors with a 59. Annabel DeKraaker of Big Rapids scored highest in the psychology test and also took sixth place in the English test, which was won by Marjorie Morrison of Manistique. Of the nine highest in the English test six were women, while in mathematics test the men had a similar advantage.

The sport suit of wool (above, left) is a youthful style that will be most popular this fall for general outdoor wear. For afternoon wear the stunning suit of broadtail cloth worn by Gloria Swanson (center), and the simple silk suit trimmed with galvak fabric (extrem right) are ideal. Below—an off-the-forehead hat of soieil, with a novelty trimming of mink across the back; an appropriate hat to wear with the new fall suits.

Holland High for Music in Big Way

Holland High school band has the largest enrollment in its history. Participants include 34 clarinets, 11 saxophones, 13 cornets, 9 slide trombones, 2 or 3 each in alto, baritone, piccolo and basses and 7 drums and traps. The mixed chorus numbers about 80 members. An operetta will be staged. A girls' sextet also has been formed.

The Blue Triangle club is packing a treasure chest for the children in the Philippine islands.

BIG DEMAND FOR WILD LIFE FILMS

That the wild life picture taken by Walter E. Hastings and distributed by the educational division of the state conservation department are proving highly useful to the schools of Michigan is indicated by the fact that Detroit schools are asking this season for new copies of Wild Wings and Michigan Mammals, pictures which were used by them throughout the entire school year of 1929-1930.

In making the request the department of visual education explains that several schools did not have an opportunity of seeing these pictures last year and that many others wish to use them over again.

It also is planned to show these two wild life pictures to all the Detroit evening schools this year. W. W. Whittinghill of the visual education department explains. He declares the demand for these two pictures is just as great this year as it was last.

The prints of these two films furnished by the conservation department to the Detroit schools a year ago are worn out, Whittinghill reports, indicating the extensive use made of the pictures.

The Detroit schools also have requested copies of any new wild life or conservation picture released by the department this fall.

Fraternities Seek Exemption From Tax

The intra-fraternity council of the University of Michigan may again take up the cudgel for exemption from taxation of fraternity property. Agitation to bring about such exemption took place during the meeting of the 1929 legislature, and it is understood that efforts will be made to get the question before the legislature again this year.

The council, made up of all fraternities on the campus, will discuss the question and may go further. It seeks exemption from the general property tax on the ground that fraternities are closely affiliated with the university and university property is exempt. Under the law, the property can be relieved only if deeded to the university.

Nearly 100 fraternities have property at Ann Arbor which yields close to $150,000 annually in taxes.

Our Country Day By Day

By ANNE BYRON

"CITY OF RALEIGH"

North Carolina, one of the original "thirteen" of these United States, has many distinctive traits which make its history one of the most interesting.

It was in the first "City of Raleigh" on Roanoke Island that the first white child of English parents was born in America and it was due to co-operation of the officers of the colony of North Carolina, who so nobly supported the Committee of Correspondence in its work of denouncing "taxation without representation" that made possible the final break.

The old city of Raleigh on Roanoke Island came into being in the spring of 1587, upon the arrival of Governor White from England.

Of it only old Fort Raleigh, its defense, now remains. Governor White left for England expecting to return within a few months with more settlers and supplies. But when he came back, two years later, the colonists had gone without a trace.

Then what is now North Carolina and all the rest of North America was Virginia, so named by Sir Walter Raleigh in honor of his queen, the great Elizabeth.

The inspiration of Sir Walter's great name persisted, and when, in 1787, the convention of the people of the state of North Carolina decreed that there should be a "fixed and unalterable seat of government," it was also decreed that it should be named in Raleigh's honor.

The Raleigh of today was established, bought and paid for on March 30, 1792.

Your Handwriting And What It Tells

By JANET WINTON

*and just to prove it
that I am on my way*

Gilda Gray

SHIMMY QUEEN ANALYZED

Gilda Gray may have shimmyed her way to success, but she can do an equally good job wriggling her pen across the page.

Notice how disjointed and irregular the writing is, how it sweeps up and away? The varied size and slant stand for a contradictory disposition, while the upward trend of the writing is evidence of buoyancy and enthusiasm.

Gilda is fun loving. She is restless and highly emotional—more mood than mind and so cannot be classified as a mental type. However, she is intelligent and quick to perceive, shown in extremely angular letter formations. She is innately shrewd.

Dash dots merely emphasize a lively temperament. Lower case letter "m" is made like capital "M," with an outward curve, revealing a sense of humor. Pronoun "I" is good natured and jolly. It shows that Gilda is a good sport.

Though this is an unusually active hand there is little loss of motion in superfluous strokes. Beginning strokes and ending strokes stop short. The former stand for frankness, the latter for unaggressiveness.

Long, lower loops show ambition of a materialistic nature. Among other traits is goodness of heart. Such writers are by no means easy to understand. They are whimsical and subject to moodiness. They do not plan. If they want to do anything it must be done impulsively, if at all.

SPEAKING OF "EXPERTS"

"Dear Janet Winton: The other day I read of a one-armed hand-writing expert, who was nabbed by the police for practicing forgery. From this I gather that any graphologist could become a forger if he—or she—so desires. Am I right?"

"Willie G."

You are partially right. For, though a graphologist is not always a forger, a forger is always a hand-writing expert!

The "handwriting expert" of the forger type, is of unstable character. He is born with the ability to write many hands. This makes it possible for him to accurately imitate another's script.

The graphologist, on the other hand, is not born with a knowledge of hand-writings, but must study and work hard to become a "handwriting expert."

Beauty by RUTH CORBY

When the new dresses came in, many a child asked its mother—"What is a waistline, Mamma?" They were out of sight THAT long. Now they are back in style, and many women are rather perturbed to find that it's easier to define them than to acquire them!

A waistline IS more or less acquired. If we never moved around from the time we were babies we would be straight up and down. The amount of exercise we get forced upon us will gradually define the waistline, but only the exercises we take that are more strenuous than those required for ordinary living will give us the lovely slenderness that is necessary today.

There are many types of figures. There are women who are broad across the shoulders and narrow hipped; there are women who have broad hips and narrow sloping shoulders. There are short legged, and long legged and heavy and delicate figures. They may all be lovely—in their own way. But when a woman starts to make her figure look its best, she usually has some ideal in mind. When she does not attain that goal, she becomes discouraged, and is sure that she must look "dumpy" for the rest of her natural life.

Nothing is further from the truth. Make over your figure to its own ideal proportions. If your bones are large don't reduce to the point of emaciation simply to conform to the weight standard in a certain table. If you are short waisted, choose clothes that are slenderizing to the hips and fluffy around the bodice. If you are long waisted, the plain bodice is most suitable, and you can luckily wear bou-fant taffetas panels or many other styles even though they call attention to the hips.

Each one of us has a natural corset of muscles that must be cultivated. Even though they are now buried under layers of fat, they are there, and making them work will burn up the fat.

A splendid exercise for the waistline is given above. Start it gradually and be careful that you do not lose your balance. Another good exercise is one like a rocking chair. Lay face downward on the floor. Raise the legs up in back, and hold each ankle with your hands. Then rock back and forth gently, for about five minutes. If the hips are slightly too large, reverse the rocking process. Sit on the floor, double up your legs, and clasp the hands firmly around the ankles—the left hand on the right ankle, the right hand on the left ankle. Then repeat the rocking movement, varying it occasionally by rocking sideways as well.

Twisting is another good way to bring that waistline into position. But don't do it jerkily—you might hurt yourself. If you are not accustomed to doing it, the best way to start is by letting the body describe a complete circle, the rotation coming entirely at the waist. Stand with the feet about six inches apart, the knees straight, the body bent over, the arms hanging down loosely. Slowly swing the body to the right, letting the pull come at the waist. You should FEEL it there! Continue to the side, as far as possible, then swing back to the other side and down in front. If it makes you dizzy, reverse the swing the next time, describing a complete circle about ten times.

Secretary of State for Louisiana

Alice Lee Grosjean, 24 years old, who has been serving as confidential secretary to Gov. Huey P. Long for the last six years, became secretary of state for Louisiana, the only woman ever to hold one of the state's major offices. She succeeds James J. Bailey, holder of the position for the last fourteen years, who died recently. Her salary will be $7,000 a year.
