Depositors Meeting

BANK DEPOSITORS MEETING HELD

About 500 People Attend Meeting of Depositors of the Pinckney Closed Bank Wednesday Night.

A crowd estimated to number at least 500 people gathered at the Pinckney Community Hall last Wednesday evening at which time a meeting of the depositors of the Pinckney State Bank which closed April 6, was held. The employees of the bank and all the directors but one were present.

Don VanWinkle, Howell attorney, was the principal speaker. He told the history of the bank, the reasons which led to its closing and the previous efforts of the bank directors to keep the institution running. Mr. VanWinkle is a pleasing talker and his remarks were quietly listened to by the depositors. Receiver Charles Monroe read a number of financial statements concerning the investments of the bank and then Mr. VanWinkle asked for questions. C. H. Kennedy and M. J. Reason asked several questions as to why the bank failed to pay clearing house checks the last two days the bank was open while they accepted deposits and paid personal checks brought into the bank. These questions Mr. VanWinkle said he could not answer. The editor of the Dispatch asked as to the cost of liquidating the bank and the salary of the receiver. This Mr. VanWinkle said he could not answer as the salary of Mr. Monroe had not yet been determined and at the present time it would be hard to say when the affairs of the bank would be settled. A. F. Brown asked several questions concerning the status of school funds on deposit in the bank and Harold Schram of White Lodge Country Club inquired as to how much time was required for a check to go through the clearing house and if a bank open for business could refuse to cash them.

Lucius Wilson then made a motion that a seven man committee be appointed to act for the depositors and ascertain if it would be possible to reopen the bank. The following committee was nominated and elected: Claude Kennedy, M. J. Reason, P. W. Curlett, Lucius Wilson, Claude Reason, Harold Schram and Fred Slayton.

C. H. Kennedy then asked how much money would be required to reopen the bank in addition to the stock assessment and was told in case the bank reorganized no stock assessment could be levied. That the only person who has power to levy a stock assessment is a permanent receiver.

Martin J. Lavan, representing a group of Hamburg township depositors, asked Mr. VanWinkle on what date the bank became insolvent. This Mr. VanWinkle stated that it would be impossible for him to say. Mr. Lavan then asked what were the amounts of the bank accounts of the directors on the date of closing, April 6. Mr. Monroe then read the totals of the account of each director. Jay Sweeney, prosecuting attorney of Livingston county then arose and stated that he had petitioned Judge Joseph Collins of the Livingston county circuit court for a one man grand jury investigation of the affairs of the bank. This he stated would start at Howell Monday.

Martin Kennedy, Detroit attorney, speaking for a group of depositors inquired as to the $20,000 borrowed from a Detroit bank some time ago. Sixty-nine thousand dollars worth of the bank bonds were deposited as a security for this loan and the bank is pressing for immediate payment.

These discussions were long and drawn out and it was nearly 11:00 p. m. before the meeting broke up. It is to be regretted that the bank closing had to happen. If the directors made any errors it was in their anxiety to keep the bank running at any cost. We are confident that there was absolutely no criminal intent in any of their transactions. Everyone of them was born and raised here and have lived in this section their entire life time and there has never been a breath of suspicion against any of them. The hostile attitude manifested at the meeting is to be greatly regretted. The men against whom it was directed have served this community long and faithfully and these services should enter into consideration at the present time.

Senior Play

Full House Greets Annual Play of the Pinckney High School Put on Last Friday Night.

Another dramatical success was scored by the Pinckney High School last Friday night in the presentation of their annual play "The Ginger Girl." This is a comedy which is filled with laughable dialogue

Ralph Carr in the part of the misunderstood husband who is working long hours in order to get a start in life, was excellent. His part was extremely long, consisting of some 450 speeches which he had letter perfect. Marjorie Merrill gave a very good interpetation of the young wife who is prone to give too much credit to the gossip of snooping neighbors. Leonard Devereaux was a regular Ambrose Potts in his character of the small town banker who holds his bank's reputation above all else and guards it zealously. Clifford Miller, the radio announcer, whose well meant efforts to help his friend, Carr, out of trouble, only got him in more, was very adept in his part. Gerald Henry took the part of Nosey Mosley, a neighbor, who spends his time attending to other people's business, in an excellent manner. Virginia Hoisel took the part of the servant girl in a nice breezy way and Druscilla Meabon in the impersonation of the romantic old maid who sets her trap for the town banker, was very good in her role. Margaret McKune interpeted a jealous minded wife who tries to make her husband walk a chalk line and also to assist other wives to do likewise with theirs. Carl Soper was the wealthy capitalist who makes every one happy at the end by buying the invention of the hero for a fabulous sum. Hubert Ledwidge did nicely in the part of a doctor and Stanley was also good in his brief part of a patrolman. The latter also acted as stage carpenter. The immitation of ambulance siren and fireman's bell were also his inventions. Last but not least we come to the lead of the play, this being the part of the "Ginger Girl." This was filled by Maida McCleer of Gregory, daughter of Lawrence McCleer, old time star of Livingston county amateur threatricals. His daughter seems to have inherited the talent of her distinguished father and her acting in this role could not have been improved upon. She is a wee winsome missie of the Mary Pickford type.

The specialities were group singing by a number of high school girls and several solos by Miss Dorothy Wilson. The proceeds of the play were slightly less than one hundred dollars.

Putnam Play Day

LIVINGSTON COUNTY PLAY DAY

Was Attended by Over A Hundred Pupils, Parents and Teachers. All Events Went Off Nicely.

The Putnam township district schools play day was held at the Pinckney athletic field Thursday. It is of course impossible to estimate the attendance but there were considerable over one hundred people there.

The editor of the Dispatch was asked to act as chairman and accepted, not without some misgivings as he was well acquainted with some of the star athletes billed to compete in the events and was doubtful of his ability to perform to their satisfaction. However when he can say that he umpired three ball games in which the Red, Hause, Marble and Harris schools competed and in the last one in which the championship was at stake; he called balls and strikes for the two ferocious hard playing captains, Harold Campbell of the Red schoolhouse and Lloyd Hendee of the Hause school and suffered no loss of life or limb, it will have to be admitted he had luck if nothing else.

The crowd began to arrive after nine o'clock in the morning and the first ball game was started between the Hause and Harris school at 10:30 This was won by the Hause school 25 to 6. The batteries for Hause were Lloyd Hendee and Charles Smith; for Harris school, Joe Barnowski and Ernest Boja. The Red school house took the second game from the Marble school 27 to 8. Batteries for the Red school house were Harold Campbell and Paul Singer; for the Marble school, Edna Carpenter and Keith Ledwidge. This concluded the mornings activities and a pot luck dinner was served on the grounds by the parents of the children.

Following the dinner the deciding ball game was played between Red and Hause schools which the Red school house won 8 to 1. The game was close until the final innings, when the Red school took a commanding lead. James Singer, star short stop for the winners hit four home runs. The batteries were Red school, Campbell and Singer; Hause, Hendee and Smith.

The other athletic events were then pulled off. The Sprout school won the horse shoe pitching contest. Their team was Lloyd VanBlaricum Carl Garnet; Marble school was second, their team was Marsh Ledwidge and John Kellenberger. Hause school was third. Lloyd Hendee and Chas. Smith composed their team. The Singer Bros. made up the Red school team and Joe Barnowski and Ernest Boja, the Harris contestants.

In the running relay of 200 yards, the Red school was first, Marble second and Sprout third. The winning team was made of Harold Campbell, James Singer, Nelson Shehan and Emmett Clark.

The Centipede race was also won by the Red school with the Harris second and Sprout school third.

The Red school house boys also took another first in the jumping relay, with the Marble school second second and Sprout third.

The ball throw was won by the Sprout school with an average of 213 feet. The Hause was second and Marble third.

In the 100 yd. relay for children, 10 years and under, the Harris school won first, Marble second and Sprout third.

All of the athletics events were refereed by A. L. May, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Lansing district.

The teachers of the different schools, the Misses Elizabeth Driver, Dede Hinchey, Betty Steinacker, Raymonda Ledwidge and Leslie Simmons are to be congratulated over successful carrying out of the program and the excellent control they had over their pupils. Although probably some fifty or sixty competed in the different events there was absolutely no confusion whatever, everything going off smoothly.

Current Comment

All the acts passed by the legislature at Lansing became laws last Wednesday, except one when Gov. Brucker affixed his signature to them. The one which he refused to sign was the McBride land contract bill which provides that in case 50 per cent or more of the face of a land contract had been paid, together with insurance and taxes, no writ or restitution could be issued if the defendant paid the amount due six months after the judgement. The governor said he believed that the purposed law would have been unconstitutional but that he would have signed it as an emergency measure if it had been given immediate effect. The budget reduces the state property tax from $129,000,000 to $423,000,000. It cuts the appropriations for each department and institution and makes salary cuts ranging from 10 to 25 per cent effective July 1.

No doubt many people who attended the depositors meeting here last Wednesday evening, wondered how the Pinckney State Bank came to buy $3,000 worth of foreign bonds which are listed among their assets. The Washtenaw Tribune in an editorial last Friday explains this and lays the blame for flooding the country with these bonds on the international bankers of this country. All the foreign nations engaged in the World War came out of the struggle on a verge of bankruptcy. This country had a surplus of products and apperently money. The international bankers conceived the idea that if they loaned more money to the countries who already owed us more than they could pay in many decades, it would build up our foreign trade and take care of our surplus. No stipulation was made that they would buy goods of us and in some cases the money was used to build up competition in foreign countries. Then the international bankers passed these bonds on to the small bankers and the investors, retaining none for themselves.

This was possible as the international banker was regarded as a confidential advisor a friend and a guardian in financial matters. So they unloaned some $15,000,000,000 on the public of these now nearly worthless bonds. Either the international banker knew no more than the rest of us or they took advantage of the ignorance of the people. The revealations before the senate investigating committee have destroyed the confidence of the public in the international banker and it is doubtful if they will ever again have the confidence and esteem that they once enjoyed.

WEEK OF MAY 29

The early part of the week of May 29th will have moderating temperatures in the most parts of Michigan. In fact, we expect readings to be above the seasonal normal in this state. Sunday may be generally pleasant, but we look for increasing cloudiness and heavy showers during parts of Monday, Memorial Day. This condition may possibly continue over into Tuesday.

From the middle part of the week until near the close we are expecting generally fair and sunshiny weather in most parts of Michigan.

During Tuesday or Wednesday temperatures will be falling somewhat, but this condition will not last over a day or so. Temperatures during the latter part of the week will again be above the seasonal normal. The end of the week may bring some unsettled and windy weather, but we are of the opinion there will be but little if any rainfall at this time.

Rainy Weather and Slow Storms

Our prediction of "more or less sluggishness in the atmosphere" for week beginning May 8th was clearly proven true by the prolonged rain immediately after Mother's Day. To many farmers this was a welcome sight, but to others, especially those with heavy ground, found that this rain set them back several days in their farm work.

While we are taking the credit for knowing when storms will move slowly, we must apologize for underestimating the sluggishness of the storm center in question.

A storm at this season of the year normally averages 600 miles a day, but the one crossing the country from the 5th to the 10th only made 900 miles progress; hence so much rain in Michigan. Consequently our prediction of "rainy weather" fell short on the correct number of days.

It will be found these forecasts will occasionally be off a day one way or the other as a result of storms coming earlier or later than predicted. Even at these times forecasts and actual weather changes will follow in absolute sequence.

Dinner Stories

A woman entered a grocer's shop and asked for some good cheese. The grocer showed her some which did not please her. She wanted some particularly "lively" cheese. He showed her the remainder of his stock, but she wasn't satisfied. She wanted it still more "lively."

At last the grocer, losing patience, called sarcastically to his assistant:

"John, unchain No. 7 and let it walk in."

A hunter was showing off his collection of trophies to a group of visitors. He was rapturously explaining how he acquired the various exhibits.

MAD LAUGHTER

A THRILLING MYSTERY STORY + by MILES BURTON

Released by Central Press Association—Copyright

Dick stepped from his hiding place, and tottered towards it. A cheerful hail greeted him, and he heard the voice of the landlord of the Anchor and Hope. "Is that you, Mr. Penhampton?" he said. "We've been terrible anxious about you, since you didn't come back to catch the train. Thought you'd got lost in the storm, mostlike. Hearing you talk to old Gaffer Dule last night I thought as how you might have come over this way. Jump in sir, and I'll drive you back.' '

Dick approached the trap and clambered wearily in. Then, for the first time, the landlord noticed his condition, and uttered an exclamation of concern. "Why, whatever have you been doing of, sir?" he inquired.

"Had an accident," replied Dick briefly. "Fell down one of those old shafts, and had a devil of a job to get out. Now I must get into Wells as fast as ever you can drive."

"You were lucky to get out at all, sir," said the landlord impressively. "There's many a one fallen down them pits and never been seen alive again. But you can't go back to London like that, sir. Better let me drive you home, where you can get a change.'

"I'll change later," replied Dick, "I must get to Wells without losing a moment. It's a matter of life and death, man."

The landlord, a discreet man in his way, made no further comment. The rest of the drive was made in silence, and the lights of Wells came in sight as the Cathedral clock was striking six. They were entering the town when a breakdown lorry passed them, towing a car which had obviously been involved in an accident.

Dick recognized it at once. He had seen it often enough when he was staying at Westridge Hall. It was Alison's two-seater which she always drove herself. He was too late.

He shouted at the top of his voice, and the driver of the breakdown lorry looked around. Dick beckoned to him to stop, and as the trap drew up alongside he asked incoherently for the details of the accident. He knew the car. Had a lady not been driving it?

"Yes, that's right, sir," replied the man. "Queer thing, she was driving along the Shepton road, not five miles from here, when a tree came down on top of her. There's a dozen or more trees come down in this gale that I see. There's a lot of damage done. The radiator's done in, and the front axle's buckled, but that's all."

"But what about the lady who was driving, man?" interrupted Dick, impatiently.

"They'd taken her away afore I got there," replied the man. "'Bout three o'clock it happened, from what they told me. A branch of the tree caught her, they say. Took her away in an ambulance to the hospital from what I hear."

The ominous words fell like blows upon Dick's heart. It was impossible to tell from them whether Alison was alive or dead. The landlord had already turned his horse's head and was driving rapidly in a fresh direction.

"The hospital, quick as ever you can!" cried Dick.

"Aye, sir," replied the landlord. "That's where we're bound for. We'll learn about the lady there."

They reached the hospital in a very few minutes and Dick leaped out and pealed frantically at the bell. In a few minutes he was in the presence of the matron, who listened sympathetically to his inquiry.

"Miss Weatherleigh?" she replied: "I'm afraid that you cannot see her at present. She is still unconscious. It is very difficult to say how seriously she is injured yet, but the doctor has ascertained that there are no bones broken. A very serious concussion—more than that I cannot say. The only clue we had to her identity was a letter we found in her bag and addressed to Miss Weatherleigh, Lestridge Hall, Lincolnshire. I put a trunk call through as soon as she was brought in, and was able to speak to her father. He was very much distressed at the news, and is on his way here now."

Her glance traveled from Dick's pallid face to his torn hands, still clotted with blood. "You appear to have met with an accident yourself," she continued. "You had better let me tie up your wounds."

Dick allowed himself to be led unresistingly to the surgery, where his hands were cleaned and bound up. Then the matron ventured the question which had been on her lips since his entrance. "You are a relative of Miss Weatherleigh's, perhaps?"

"I am engaged to be married to her," replied Dick, simply.

"Then no doubt you will be glad to be on the spot," said the matron. "I have an empty room which you can occupy tonight as a patient. You seem utterly done up. If I promise to call you if there should be any change in Miss Weatherleigh's condition, will you go up there and lie down? You're no use to anybody in your present state."

"I must see Dr. Weatherleigh the moment he comes," replied Dick. "I've had a most unfortunate accident and I'm afraid I'm utterly' played out."

"Of course you are, any one can see that," she interrupted. "Now then, drink this, and then you can lie down for a little."

Dick allowed himself to be led to a small private ward, where he lay down on the bed. In a few minutes his weariness overcame him, and he fell into the deep sleep of utter exhaustion.

CHAPTER XLVII

Dick was awakened by a touch on his shoulder, and started up, in full possession of his senses, to confront the matron. "I've good news for you," she said. "Miss Weatherleigh has regained consciousness, and her brain shows no ill effects from the blow. In fact, I think that, before very long, we shall be able to move her to her home. We have told her that you are here, and you may see her for a second or two."

She led him into Alisons' room, tactfully remaining outside the door. Alison gave a little cry of delight as she saw him, and he bent down and kissed her tenderly. "How do you feel, sweetheart?" he asked.

"All right," she replied bravely. "I've got a dreadful headache, though, as if I'd a had night out. Listen, Dick, I had an old pig of lead in the car when that tree hit me. It belongs to a friend of father's, and I was taking it to Lestridge Hall for father to see. I believe it's very valuable, but nobody was to know anything about it till father had examined it. You might find out what has become of it."

"I'll see to it for you," replied Dick cheerfully. "It's probably still in the car, which I saw being towed to a garage. But you needn't worry about it, darling. Dr. Weatherleigh has been told of your accident, and he is on his way here now."

The matron interrupted their conversation, and led Dick from the room. "The less she is allowed to talk the better," she said. "All she wants is perfect rest. Dr. Weatherleigh ought to be here very soon now, he telephoned from London three or four hours ago, asking for the latest news, and saying that he was continuing the journey by car, since there was no train for some hours."

Dick looked at his watch. To his amazement it was nearly eight o'clock in the morning; he had slept the clock round. There was no time to be lost. Alisons' accident had driven everything else out of his mind, but now the events of the previous day returned to his memory with redoubled force. He must get in touch with Sir Edric, and tell him everything.

He found that the landlord of the Anchor and Hope, learning that he had remained at the hospital for the night, had brought over his suit-case. He therefore changed his torn and mud-begrimed clothes and left the hospital, with the intention of telephoning Sir Edric. But, on the way, he decided to wait till he had seen Dr. Weatherleigh, whose arrival could not be much longer delayed. His evidence as to the source from which he heard of the existence of the leaden pig was essential.

Dick, therefore, went instead to the garage to which Alison's car had been towed. He was allowed to inspect it, and found that the pig was still in the dickey. This, Dick reflected, was probably the safest place for it at present. It bore no clue as to its real value, and nobody was likely to tamper with it, owing to its weight. Having satisfied himself on this point, he returned to the hospital.

As he approached it, a car drove up, and a passenger alighted from it. He recognized Dr. Weatherleigh and hastened to meet him. The doctor turned at the sound of his footsteps.

"Dick! You here? What does it mean?" he exclaimed.

Dick put his hand on Dr. Weatherleigh's arm. "It's all right, Doctor," he replied reassuringly, "Alison's getting on splendidly. Come along in, they'll let you see her."

"Thank God," said Dr. Weatherleigh. "I was afraid—afraid—" and he did not finish the sentence.

* * *

Dick waited impatiently for Dr. Weatherleigh's reappearance. Now that he was assured of Alison's recovery, he was desperately anxious to put the police on the track of the gang, before its members had time to disperse. In that Dr. Weatherleigh could assist him. Indeed, it was quite possible that his evidence might put Scotland Yard on the path that would lead eventually to the Funny Toff.

Alison's accident must have thrown the whole plan out of gear, so much was evident. The men detailed to waylay her could not have heard of the mishap, and they must be in complete ignorance as to the whereabouts of the leaden pig. This, Dick determined, should be deposited at the local station, as soon as Dr. Weatherleigh's permission was obtained. On the whole, as things had turned out, the accident was the best thing that could have happened. Alison, at least, was in perfect safety.

At last Dr. Weatherleigh appeared, looking far less anxious than he had on his arrival. "Alison has had a most merciful escape," he said. "I was fortunate enough to see the doctor in charge of the case, and he assures me that no ill consequences are to be feared. She requires complete rest and quiet, he tells me. Even you and I are not to see her for the present. But I do not understand how you heard the news of her accident?"

"Thats' rather a long story, Doctor," Dick replied. "It's long and it involves a very urgent matter—"

"Yes, I know," interrupted Dr. Weatherleigh. "You mean Professor Cobbold's discovery of the early Roman pig. Alison told me that she had asked you to make inquiries as to its safety. Have you succeeded?"

"Yes, it's safe enough," replied Dick. "It is still in the back of the car, in a garage by here."

"Ah, that is a great relief to my mind!" exclaimed Dr. Weatherleigh fervently. "It would have been a disaster if anything had happened to it. You see, it is not my property, though if it is as Professor Cobbold describes it, I shall endeavor to purchase it for my collection. As an antique, it is exceedingly valuable."

"It is certainly exceedingly valuable," replied Dick slowly. "But not as an antique, I am afraid. In fact, I have the best of reasons for knowing it to be a forgery."

"A forgery!" exclaimed Dr. Weatherleigh incredulously. "My dear boy, that is absolutely impossible! Professor Cobbold distinctly told me that he had examined it himself. He is one of the leading authorities upon antiquities of the Roman period, and it is ridiculous that he could be deceived."

"When did you see Professor Cobbold, Doctor?" asked Dick quietly.

"I did not see him," replied Dr. Weatheleigh. "He rang me up from London, the morning of the day before yesterday. He described his find most enthusiastically, and told me that he did not wish to announce it until I had seen it, and confirmed his opinion as to its exact date. I asked him to bring it to Lestridge Hall, so that we might examine it together, but he explained that his engagements would not permit him to do so. We therefore arranged that Alison should drive down and fetch it in her car. She was to start at once and stay the night at the Empire hotel in Both, Professor Cobbold was to ring her up there yesterday morning and make an appointment with her."

"Did you ask Alison just now if this actually happened?" Dick inquired.

"I did. She told me that Professor Cobbold rang her up, and asked her to come to some discussed workings, close to the place where the pig had been found, where either the Professor himself or his assistant would meet her. He described the situation of the workings exactly, and she had no difficulty in finding them. She arrived there shortly after two o'clock, the time fixed by the Professor, and was given the pig. She then started home, intending to reach London last night. Her intention was to call on you, and ask you to drive back with her to Lestridge Hall today."

CHAPTER XLVIII

"Are you quite certain that it was Professor Cobbold who spoke to you on the telephone?" persisted Dick.

"Why, what doubt could there possibly be?" replied Dr. Weatherleigh. "Voices are often indistinct over a trunk line, as you know. But there is no reason to suppose that it was not Professor Cobbold speaking."

There was every reason to suppose that it was not Professor Cobbold, thought Dick, unless Professor Cobbold and the Funny Toff were one and the same person. This might be so, but it seemed highly improbable. Much more likely that the Funny Toff had used the Professor's name, knowing the weight that it would carry with Dr. Weatherleigh. No doubt Sir Edric would be able to trace that trunk call, and so obtain a definite starting point for his inquiries.

His thoughts were interrupted by Dr. Weatherleigh. "I still don't see, Dick, how you got here. I assume that Alison communicated with you from Bath, asking you to meet her."

"No, she didn't do that," replied Dick slowly. "But, as a matter of fact, I was actually inside the workings when the pig was cast, and when, an hour or two later, Alison came to fetch it."

"When the pig was cast!" exclaimed Dr. Weatherleigh, in a tone of complete bewilderment. "My dear boy, you must be suffering from hallucinations! The pig was cast hundreds, perhaps thousands of years ago. Or, alternatively, if it were only cast yesterday, as you say, how could Professor Cobbold, or any one else, for that matter, have known of its existence the previous day?"

"I'm afraid that we are all involved in a gigantic conspiracy," replied Dick gravely. "The whole thing is merely another of the Funny Toff's amazing escapades. Listen, Doctor."

Dick recounted at length everything that had happened to him since he left Lestridge Hall. Dr. Weatherleigh listened with close attention, occasionally uttering an exclamation of astonishment or concern. When Dick had come to an end of his story, he remained for some moments lost in thought.

"There would appear to be only one thing to be done," he said at last. "It is your duty to place the facts in possession of your friend, Sir Edric Conway, and that at once before these miscreants have time to make their escape."

"I propose to get on the telephone to him immediately," replied Dick.

"It would be far more satisfactory to interview him personally," remarked Dr. Weatherleigh. "It will only mean a delay of a couple of hours at most, for you to catch the next train to London and take the pig with you. If you care for me to do so, I will accompany you, for Sir Edric will doubtless like to hear my account."

"I should be only too glad if you would, doctor," replied Dick eagerly.

"Since I am not allowed to see Alison, I have no objection," said Dr. Weatherleigh. "I can return here after the interview. We had better start at once; there is, I believe, a train about ten o'clock."

Dick agreed. He set out to purchase a suitcase large enough to contain the pig. Dr. Weatherleigh, while he was doing this, suggested sending a telegram to Sir Edric, announcing their intended arrival. They met at the garage, where Dr. Weatherleigh looked closely at the pig before it was put into the suitcase.

"A very clever forgery, if, indeed, it is one," he remarked. "I could form no opinion as to its genuineness without a very careful and detailed examination. It appears to be very heavy. Do you think that we can manage it between us?"

"Oh, yes," replied Dick confidently. "We'll get the garage people to drive us to the station, and a porter can put it under the seat of a carriage for us. I don't feel like letting it out of my sight."

"You are quite right," agreed Dr. Weatherleigh. "We have assumed a great responsibility. I am not sure even now, that we ought not to place it in the care of the local police."

But Dick protested. "That would mean a waste of time," he replied. "We haven't too much time to catch our train, as it is. Besides, Scotland Yard will want to keep this in their own hands. They wouldn't be pleased if we let the local police in."

Dr. Weatherleigh allowed himself to be overruled, and they started for the station. They secured a first-class carriage for themselves, and the suitcase containing the pig was placed under the seat. Dick heaved a sigh of relief as the train started. His task, at least, was at an end. An unforeseen accident, the falling of the tree upon Alison's car, had thrown the Funny Toff's plans out of gear, and had afforded the opportunity for the police to get on his track. Yes, but had it not been for the reasoning which had guided him to the deserted workings, the secret of the leaden pig would never have been solved. The Funny Toff's agents would eventually have traced it, and would, no doubt, have found some means of recovering possession of it. Sir Edric would certainly have cause to modify his opinion of the amateur detective.

Although Dick realized that the capture of the Funny Toff himself was the ultimate object to be aimed at, he was keenly interested in the fate of his agents. His information would enable the police to round up the three men who had attempted to murder him, and the thought he found considerable satisfaction. He felt that he owed them a legitimate grudge, and he looked forward eagerly to the prospect of identifying them. It would be a distinctly unpleasant shock for them to be confronted with the man whom they imagined to be safely suffocated!

Dick had not entirely recovered from the effects of his adventure. His hands were still very painful, and his whole body ached from his fall from the gate. Now that he was compelled to sit still and do nothing, he felt distinctly shaky, and at the same time possessed by a feeling of irritating restlessness. Dr. Weatherleigh, who sat opposite him in the corner of the carriage, must have noticed his condition.

"You are not yourself, my boy, and I dont' wonder at it," he said gently. "I have some knowledge of medicine, and I know the symptoms. I always carry with me a sedative of my own composition. A small dose of it will do you all the good in the world."

He prdouced a flask, poured some of its contents into the cup, and offered it to Dick, who swallowed it gratefully. Almost immediately his restlessness left him, and he fell into a doze, infinitely pleasant to his tired body. The rumble of the train softened him; and he fell into pleasant dreams in which Alison played the principal part.

How long he dozed he could not tell. His dreams changed, and he was back in the cell, the cold draught of air from the roof blowing strongly upon him. He opened his eyes, to find the carriage door wide open, and a tall form standing beside it.

He sprang to his feet, half awake, feeling instinctively the imminence of catastrophe. As he did so, the man thrust out an arm, at the same time thrusting his fot between Dick's legs. For an instant Dick swayed, clutching wildly. Then he felt himself hurled off his balance and falling through space. And above the roar of the train he heard peal after peal of the demoniac laughter of the Funny Toff.

Ceramic Art Has Held Prominent Place In History

From the dawn of history, wherever man has dwelt, in cave or palace, he has enjoyed the beauty and use of earthenware, writes Dino Ferrari in the May issue of the "Moose Magazine." Ornamental and useful articles such as vases, plates and medallions, were held in high esteem by the civilizations of Egypt, China, India, Assyria and Persia; and skillful artisans were personally favored and subsidized by the ruling emperors, kings and nobles —much as the architects, sculptors and painters were engaged by the Catholic Church in the Middle Ages and the nobles of the Renaissance, to build beautiful cathedrals and palaces.

Around 1000 B. C. commerce and migration spread the art and craft of making pottery to the Western world, to the Greeks and the Etrurians (in Italy), who left us some rare and exquisite examples of ceramic workmanship. Later the Romans, the Moors and the Saracens developed civilizations around the Mediterranean basin which added to the beauty of the world wit htheir vases, jugs, plates, etc. Still later, with the Italian renaissance of learning as a starting point, the desire to make and own these humble but beautiful household objects swept, to the enrichment of mankind, over all Europe, took root in all countries, and led to the organization of ceramic industries everywhere. We are greatly indebted to the ancient and modern Indians of South, Central and North America for important contributions to ceramic art, which have beautified countless homes throughout the world.

Fine, lovely pottery is now being produced by talented and eager young students in the kilns of Mooseheart, the child city maintained by the Loyal Order of Moose. Many different shapes and forms are now made, in rich, lustrous hues of blue, purple, light brown and green. There are vases, bulb bowls, jardineres and flower pots, quaint candlesticks and jugs, unusual ash trays, tobacco jars, book ends and book sets. Lamps and dishes of all kinds, beautifully modelled and glowing in color, are also made at Mooseehart.

The pottery class at Mooseheart is composed of boys and girls who have an aptitude for modelling and design, and wish to develop this talent. They receive their inspiration from a study of the finest products of the art of ceramics, supplying the expression of their own inherent ideas of beauty. The finished articles are considered by experts to be on a par with some of the best potteries of Europe.

Yes?

"I'm afraid you won't suit us," said the foreman. "What we require is a watchman with big, powerful muscles, a watchman who'll always be alert, somebody who can sleep with both eyes open, and isn't afraid to tackle anything that comes along!"

"No, perhaps I wouldn't suit if you want all that," said the applicant thoughtfully: "but I know the very person for the job."

"Good!" exclaimed the foreman. "Who is it?"

"My wife," was the ready answer.

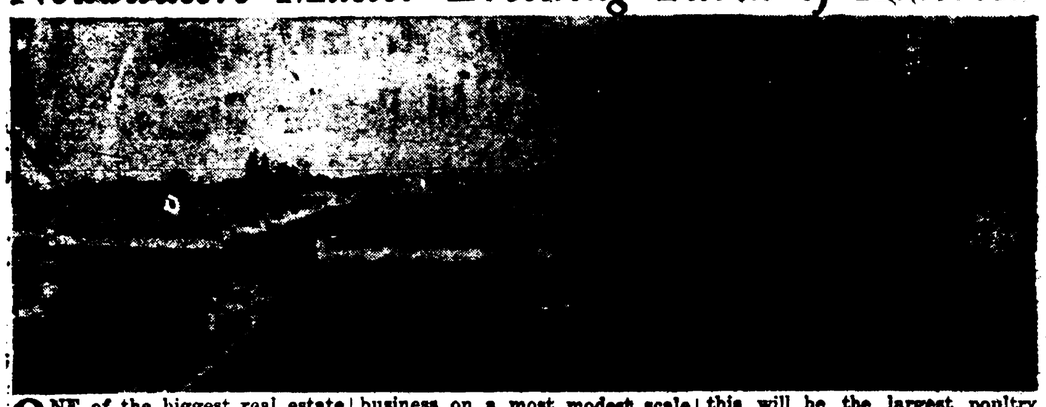
Neubausers' Master Breeding Farm of America



ONE of the biggest real estate deals ever made in this territory was announced recently when it became known that Neuhauser Bros. of Napoleon, Ohio, proprietors of the famous "Good Luck" Hatcheries, had purchased a magnificient 353-acre master breeding farm, located on M-50, seven miles east of Jackson, Michigan, and one mile west of Napoleon, Mich.

This master breeding farm is equipped with modern buildings, some 60 in all, including 54 poultry houses, 14x80, and 500 silver fox pens, the latter occupying a space of 60 enclosed acres.

The purchase of this farm is in line with a progressive program which the Neuhausers expect will result in a hatchery and fox farm of national scope of importance. These boys started in the hatchery business on a most modest scale and in late years have seen their single hatchery spread into 23 branches covering well over the north-western part of Ohio, into Indiana, Michigan and still on to Canada. They are making unceasing efforts to improve the quality of their chicks and this last farm purchase is one of the biggest steps toward chick perfection they have ever taken.

It is planned to stock the poultry houses with 15,000 laying hens of the very best bloodlines in America. They will further import stock from the internationally-celebrated Tom Barron Farms of England. In this magnificient flock there will be 20 different varieties, but about half of the birds will be big type English Leghorns and when the farm is fully stocked it can easily be seen that this will be the largest poultry breeding establishment in America.

Cockerels from this farm will be distributed to all of their branch hatchery flocks so that by this mating even better quality than ever before will be found in the sturdy chicks which are now being sent all over the United States and Canada by the Neuhausers.

Just as soon as possible another Neuhauser branch hatchery will be located at their farm where chicks will be hatched from trap-nested pedigreed stock.

The Neuhausers are also interested in their silver fox industry and they plan to move all of their valuable fur-bearing animals to this farm where the very last word in equipment and housing facilities awaits them.

Declaration That Put Agent Out of Running

"One reason why salesmen are often a pest," declares one of them, "is because people try to turn them away with flimsy or evasive excuses, instead of flat refusals that carry conviction. People who are annoyed by salesmen should be more like Bliggins.

"Mr. Bliggins is carrying a creditable amount of life insurance, but still finds himself the victim of many solicitors. 'But,' says he, as he opens the front door and is very nearly carried away in the flood of language and gesticulation, 'I have all the life insurance I can carry.'

"The salesman draws a long face. 'My dear sir,' says he, 'suppose that you should—through some unfortunate accident—be cut off from this world tomorrow, that you should be hit by a motor or street car. What would your wife do? Could she maintain her present luxurious living standard? What would she do?'

"To which Mr. Bliggins responds nonchalantly, 'Oh, well! I don't know—but I don't care. You see, I never did like her!'"

Signposts Are Real Art

Some of the suburban towns of Germany are injecting some art and humor into the signposts which are everywhere regarded as essential for the guidance of the tourist and stranger within the gates. The thought emanated at Warmbrunn, where there is a school of wood carving and the trunks of trees were transformed into life-size effigies, gayly painted with suitable inscriptions pointing out the way. For instance, one finds a schoolboy, holding in one hand a slate with the words "Fuellner Park" and pointing to the way with the other hand. Ruebezahl, the Silesian mountain spirit, clad as a reaper, and other well-known figures are employed to point out the way to the traveler. This idea has been followed by several communities in the Black forest.

Large Bird Houses

The largest individual bird house known in available records is the one in the National Zoological park, Washington, which has 155 indoor cages and 22 outdoor cages, and was erected at a total cost of $132,000. The National Zoological park, however, does not have anywhere near the largest collection of birds, as the following figures will show: Washington, 350 species; Philadelphia, 500 to 600; New York, N. Y., 700; London, 1,000; Berlin, 1,000.—Washington Star.

Monument Records Deed of Cross-Eyed Heroine

A cross-eyed woman has been honored by a monument at Hartwell, Ga.

Nancy Hart, whose memory is thus preserved, and her husband built a cabin in the hills, and were rearing a family when the Revolutionary war broke out.

While the men were away five redcoats surprised Nancy and a little girl in the cabin and ordered the woman to prepare a meal for them. Nancy, watching for an opportunity, grabbed one of the muskets and killed one of the soldiers. She then seized another gun and threatened to shoot any of the four that made resistance.

Because of her crossed eyes, none of King George's men could tell which one Nancy was looking at, so they all stood still until the men came back to see what all the shooting was for, and hanged the four soldiers. Subsequently the town of Hartwell and Hart county, of which it is the county seat, were named for the cross-eyed heroine.

Congress voted a fund for the erection of a monument to Nancy Hart.

Scallops Led to Water

The scallop season is not long and the persons who are employed in it must make the best of the time with the result that in some sections of Long Island and New England the school sessions are curtailed in order to allow the children to do their part. But the government will not permit of any irregularity in the handling of this delicacy and recently a New England fish dealer was fined $1,000 for "watering" scallops. When treated to an ordinary bath the scallops take on size and weight so that an unscrupulous dealer is really selling water at the price of scallops.

Translation

It was their first day in a military camp and the two colored recruits were sitting in the kitchen more or less industriously removing the skins from potatoes.

"Huccum," demanded the first, "huccum dat orficer keeps callin' us K. P. —K. P.?"

"Hesh you' mouf, iggorance," advised the second. "Dat am de abbreviation fo' 'Keep peelin'—keep peelin'."

Clever Imitations

Rare Chinese carvings in jade, quartz, amethyst or other extremely hard substances, usually in the form of trees and flowers, the work of generations of orientals, and therefore extremely costly, have been cleverly imitated. Wires are wrapped with tinsel, glass leaves are made to imitate amethyst or jade, and glass beads are strung on the wires.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Wise Conduct

Our laws compel merchants to give honest weight and full measure. But the wise merchant needs no such laws—he gives these as a matter of honesty and fair-dealing. The wise worker is as the wise merchant—he gives full value as a matter of principle.—Grit.

More Overproduction

Tall stories from Florida are pretty thick (in more ways than one) but this one from the Sanford (Fla.) Herald deserves repetition: "The soil around Sanford is so fertile the other day a fellow dropped his corncob pipe in the sand. Before he could pick it up it had sprouted and by the time he got it in his mouth he was eating roasting ears."

Matching this, an Edmonton (Mich.) farmer claims to have grown two cabbages so large "that a stump puller had to be used to pull them, while a tractor dragged them to the house."

"Land o' Cakes"

Scotland has been called the "Land o' Cakes," for nowhere else, Germany excepted, is there such a variety of confectionery and pastry as in Scotch bakers' shops, wrote William S. Walsh in "Curiosities of Popular Customs," the Detroit News says. The short bread, often known as "Pitcaithly bannocks," is highly ornamented with sugar and iced mottoes. Rye loaves, popular in the Thrums district, are black and rich, filled with fruit and peel. The Scotch bun, composed entirely of eggs, chopped fruit, and peel, encased in a crust which is not eaten, is much like the English simnel cake.

Old Prohibitory Laws

"One is apt to think of our times as too much ridden with prohibitory laws of all sorts," observes a writer in a Vancouver (B. C.) paper. "Other days also suffered, for in turning the pages of history one finds that King William II of England and English-American colonies signed a law that 'no person may use or sell any buttons made of cloth, serge, drugget, frieze or camlet, on pain of paying 40 shillings for every dozen.'

"Manufacturers of metal buttons at the time happened to have had great political influence and used it. For the same reason, Queen Anne prohibited wooden buttons."

Ingenious Hiding Places

The pilgrims of the Middle ages carried stout staffs instead of sticks. These staffs were useful not only in supporting weary limbs but also served to break the heads of belligerent wayfarers. Each had in its upper part a hollow tube for small treasures and coins. In such a tube, it is said, the first head of saffron was smuggled into England from Greece when to take the living plant out of the country was forbidden on pain of death; the silkworm was conveyed into Europe in a similar way.

Bird Victim of Fashion

The kittiwake, a member of the gull family that inhabits the Arctic regions of Europe and North America, takes its name from its queer, plaintive cry. These birds grow to a length of from 16 to 18 inches, and are generally white with bluish gray back and wings, yellow beaks and legs of brownish black. They have been ruthlessly slaughtered on the British islands for the millinery trade.

Credit Is Marconi's

The invention of the radio broadcasting system as now used is the work of several men, but Marconi's application of the wireless telegraph to practical purposes usually is regarded as the primary impulse which set other inventors to working on refinements resulting in what is now known as radio.

Automobile "Driven"

An automobile is neither pushed nor pulled. Pushing and pulling implies some outside force. An automobile is driven. The driving power is produced by an internal combustion engine mounted on its own frame, and the power for driving purposes is transmitted to the rear wheels through an appropriate mechanism.

Worth While

A man was amusing himself by trying all the penny-in-the-slot machines at a fair.

Presently he came to one that did not respond to his coin.

"Look here," he said to the owner of a nearby booth, pointing to the line of machines, "that one is to try your weight, the next your height, and one your strength, the next your sight, the one over there your lungs and now I've put a penny in this thing, but I don't see what it's for."

"That, gov'nor?" replied the owner. "Oh, that one's to try your temper!"

PINCKNEY WINS FROM DEXTER

The Pinckney Independents luck held good against Dexter Sunday as usual and they managed to win from them by a score of 15 to 11. Some of Pinckney's regulars failed to show up and they presented a patched up team with four players in it making their first appearance this year. Lefty Reason started in the box for Pinckney and went like a house afire for six innings, holding Dexter to 1 run and seven scattered hits.

In the seventh he tired and Dexter scored four runs. They got two more in the eighth and scared Pinckney to death by getting four more in the ninth, when the first four batters hit safely. However, Reason retired the side by pulling down Gallagher's line drive.

Reason was the Babe Ruth of the game again, getting two triples and a single. Campbell got two doubles and a single and Ward and Kennedy each got three hits apiece. Schlaf of Dexter got four hits.

STATE PARK AT LUDINGTON IS ABOUT READY

The "Ludington State Park" is the official name of Michigan's newest recreational center.

The park now in the process of organization in Mason county was officially designated by the conservation commission as the "Ludington State Park" at the March meeting upon recommendation of the parks division of the department of conservation.

The name was also the choice of the Ludington chapter of the Izaak Walton league and the Ludington chamber of commerce. Through private subscriptions in Ludington some $12,000 was contributed toward purchase of part of the new park property. In addition the Mason county board of supervisors made available $10,000 to buy land. To this the state contributed $10,000, making a total of $32,000 paid for part of the more than 3,000 acres making up the Ludington state park.

The new park lies between Lake Michigan and Hamlin lake. The state originally owned 840 acres in this area, set aside years ago for forestry purposes. In addition, 1,104 acres were obtained through gift from the federal government.

In describing the park area to the commission, the parks division said that "no better sand dunes exist in Michigan than those in this tract, both moving and wooded. Water facilities are varied and generous, having four miles frontage on Lake Michigan, two and one-half miles on Hamlin lake and three miles frontage on Sable river. The highway department recognized the value of this tract as a park site and now the final plans are being made for a road leading from US31 to the park site."

Resurrection Plant

The Genuine "Rose of Jericho"

These peculiar plants are found among the pines and cedars of Palestine. When you get the plant it will have the appearance of a ball of tightly folded leaflets, dry and dead. Put it in water and it will open up its handsome fern-like foliage, turn green and begin to grow in about twenty minutes. Take it out of the water and it curls up, turns brown and becomes dead again. It is capable of apparently dying and coming to life again repeatedly, and will keep in its dead or dormant state for years and reawaken directly upon being placed in water. It is an interesting, curious and most beautiful house plant with fine fern-like leaves of very agreeable fragrance. If you want a "table fern" that will prove satisfactory under all conditions, don't fail to get one of these marvels of plant life. Grows and thrives in a shallow bowl of water, and is greatly admired by everyone.

MICHIGAN OIL WELL PRODUCTION GAINS

The central Michigan oil field has taken a commanding lead in the production of crude over other pools of the state and Michigan is rapidly rising to the fore as the leading crude oil producing state east of the Mississippi river. W. A. Thomas, chief geologist of the Pure Oil Co., largest company in Michigan, told Mt. Pleasant Rotarians. More than 40 men identified with the oil and gas industry were guests of the Rotary club.

Thomas said Michigan in the east ranks second only to Pennsylvania and Kentucky in crude production. Total production figures of the three leading Michigan oil fields were given as follows: Mt. Pleasant, 8,300,000 barrels from 244 wells; Muskegon, 5,500,000 barrels from 219 wells; Saginaw, 1,141,000 barrels from 150 wells, as of April 30, 1932.

The Saginaw field was opened in 1925. Muskegon in 1927 and Mt. Pleasant the following year. There have been 21 producing oil wells drilled in the central Michigan field since the first of 1932. Twenty-five tests are under way now.

Court Rules Again Free Delivery Paper

An opinion of interest to established newspapers all over Michigan was filed recently by Judge Ray S. Hart in which he denied the right of a free circulation publication, the Midland Times, to force the Midland county board of supervisors to print proceedings in such publication.

John Marolf, Times manager, claimed he was the lowest bidder and the board has no discretion in the matter. The contract had been awarded the Midland and Coleman newspapers.

The court ruled the Times was not a newspaper as defined by statute and if the supervisors believed they would get more publicity by using the two established county papers they had it within their power to act. The unit price, even if lower, would not necessarily govern, said the court, because such notices were printed for the widest spread of information.

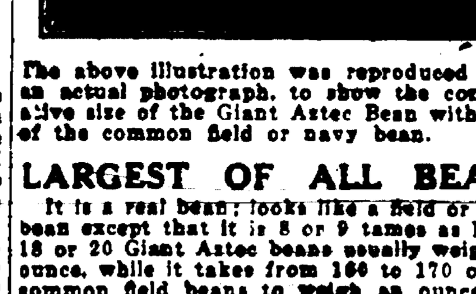
GIANT AZTEC BEAN



The above illustration was reproduced from an actual photograph, to show the comparative size of the Giant Aztec Bean with that of the common field or navy bean.

LARGEST OF ALL BEANS

It is a real bean; looks like a field or navy bean except that it is 8 or 9 times as large. 18 or 20 Giant Aztec beans usually weigh an ounce, while it takes from 160 to 170 of the common field beans to weigh an ounce. It is a bush bean; will stand more drought than most varieties; very hardy; and probably the most productive bean grown. One planter reports that two years ago he secured four beans, the product of which he replanted last spring, and in the fall harvested 240 pounds of dry beans. The quality of the Giant Aztec Bean is unexcelled both as a green and dry shell bean. Our supply of seed is limited, and the price is high, but now is the time to get started with this wonderful bean. 8 beans, 25c; 40 beans, $1.00; one-fourth lb., $2.00, postpaid.

See Dull Season Ahead For Iron Ore Industry

As no iron ore sales have been reported for 1932, one can only guess as to the amount of tonnage that will leave the mines for lower lake ports, but it is a certainty that the total for the year will be less than 1931, when 23,500,000 tons were shipped. Estimates have been placed as low as 15,000,000 tons for the lake district.

There is on hand at lower lake ports and furnaces in the neighborhood of 33,500,000 tons, the largest for this season of the year in history. The average for a period of 20 years has been 20,000,000 tons. A year ago, May 1, there were 28,700,000 tons in stock, not taking into consideration the ore held at the mines.

There are always long-term contracts standing, but it is said that some of the consumers do not want any ore shipped to their furnaces this year, there being an ample supply on hand.

The lake freighters are going to be slow to get started this season. There are more than 330 vessels that in a normal year engage in the business of hauling iron ore and coal on the lakes, but only 60 per cent of these saw service at any one time during 1931. It is doubtful if as large a percentage will operate at any time during 1932. The last half of the season is more apt to be more active than the first half.

There has been some talk of late that iron ore prices would be reduced for the coming season, but this would not tend to increase sales. If the larger consumers have contracts ahead, they gain nothing by a lower price schedule, and they are not going to add to their stocks when it is not necessary.

The outlook for the Lake mines for 1932 is a gloomy one. There is altogether too much ore on hand to warrant very much activity at the mines. It is doubtful if there is a mine that can return a profit at this time, but many have been kept going through a desire to give employment, on a reduced scale.

Site In Newaygo Made Into Park

Several years ago it was necessary in connecting the ribbon of pavement between Newaygo and Grant to change the roadway leading south out of Newaygo and as a result a plot of land, then belonging to Ananias Price, was purchased by the state and a winding road put in to connect State street with M37.

This piece of ground is so beautifully situated overlooking the Muskegon river valley and having several springs the state highway department saw an opportunity to make a beauty spot of it. Landscape men already have made a wonderful change by planting pine, cedar and birch trees. Rustic steps and benches will be placed leading to the pool and drinking fountain. A parking place has been arranged at the end of the old roadway adjacent to the park.

Plans now are under way to dedicate the park. It is likely to be another Garfield park in honor of Garfield township and Arthur Garfield Trexler, who has fostered the movement from the beginning.

Ships Five Trainloads

Shipment recently by the Norge Refrigerator Company of five solid trainloads of refrigerators, approximately 140 freight cars, made a daily record, according to an announcement at Muskegon. The 8,000 units were valued at more than $1,500,000, President Howard E. Blood of Detroit said. The plant at Muskegon now is averaging production of 35 carloads a day.

FEEDING STATION LURES SQUIRRELS

A feeding station for squirrels has been operated at Middleville this past winter by H. N. Potter.

Potter erected a box on the side of a tree only a few feet from his porch, filled it with peanuts, walnuts and hickory nuts and proceeded to entertain all the bushytails of the neighborhood. Plenty of guests came to the feast, too, he reports.

All went well until a pair of bluejays took to raiding the squirrel feed box. The jays couldn't make use of the hickory nuts or the walnuts, but the peanuts were duck soup for them and they stole this brand of squirrel food as fast as it was put out.

Potter decided to teach the uninvited guests a lesson. He attached a peanut to the box with a long thread. Down came a jay and grabbed the nut. At the end of the thread the bird was flipped end for end in the air and lost the nut besides.

The jay flew up to a convenient branch, studied the situation a few minutes, came down and grabbed another nut with a string on it. At the end of the string he again somersaulted violently.

He left the station, about as mad as a jay could be and swearing at the top of his voice, and the feed box was free from jay raids from then on.

Potter also maintains a bird feeding station during the winter months, but says he has had more fun with the squirrel food box, as it is more of a novelty.

Michigan Lakes to Be Planted With Perch

What is expected to be perhaps the largest distribution of pike-perch, or "yellow pickerel" in Michigans' lakes in years will be made by the fish division of the department of conservation in the near future.

Spawning conditions in Saginaw bay, where all of the eggs were obtained, were ideal, it was said, and unusually large quantities of eggs were gathered by commercial fishermen and turned over to the state.

Spawn taking began immediately with the reopening of the pike-perch commercial fishing season April 11. Spawning had been somewhat delayed because of the fact that the freeze-up in Saginaw bay did not come until late during the past winter. Then began a gradual rise in temperature facilitating spawning.

Wider Beaches in Holland's Section

Lower water stage in Lake Michigan has caused wider beaches.

At Macatawa Park, where much damage was done by high water in previous years, the beach has been restored beyond its former width, and at the state park at Ottawa Beach the beach has exceeded its width of last season by at least 50 feet. The same conditions prevail at the county park and at Idlewood, where a couple of years ago the beach was obliterated and 50 feet of sand dunes were undermined. The beach at the state park now has a width of nearly 300 feet.

Prison Population Nearing 6,000 Mark

Population at the Michigan state prison took a substantial jump toward the 6,000 mark predicted before the summer is over, when 45 inmates from the Detroit house of correction arrived at the institution recently by transfer. The count reached 5,847, the highest in the history of the penitentiary. The House of Correction transfer was made in busses, accompanied by a guard of state police.

Big Depositors Soften Lansing Bank Suspension

Faith of civic and industrial leaders in a Lansing institution probably never was better exemplified than in the story behind the failure of the American State Savings bank in Lansing. Records of the closed institution reveal that when it closed its doors on December 22, 1931, several of the citys' largest industries had approximately $1,190,000 of cash surplus tied up in the bank, despite the fact that officials of these companies were also directors of the bank and fully aware of its financial condition.

In fairness to the depositors, these men stood aside and allowed the large deposits of their companies to remain in the institution, despite the fact that steady withdrawals were indicating its ulimate suspension of business. Acquainted as they were with the affairs of the bank, it would have been entirely possible for the directors to withdraw the large deposits of their respective industries and leave the smaller depositors "holding the bag."

The largest amount of cash locked behind the closed doors of the bank and in custody of the receiver is the $900,000 account of the Reo Motor Car Company. Two prominent officials of the Reo company were directors and stockholders of the American State Savings bank. Other Lansing industries, whose leaders as directors of the bank could have withdrawn their funds, but who chose to see their deposits "frozen" in fairness to other depositors, were the Atlas Drop Forge Company, the Motor Wheel Corporation, the Lansing Ice and Fuel Company, the Aero Engine Company and the Federal Drop Forge Company.

Honey Now Can Be Squeezed On Bread From Tube Package

Consumers soon will be able to squeeze honey out on bread just as they squeeze toothpaste on a brush and avoid the usual stickiness and waste when honey is served from a jar or can. Honey in tube packages now is on the market, reports the United States department of agriculture.

The tubes vary in size from the small one-ounce size to those holding a half-pound of honey. Just the quantity wanted can be squeezed out at a time.

This method of packaging honey has been used to some extent in Germany, the bureau says. Another new development in the distribution of honey is its use in candy bars, combined with chocolate, nuts and other ingredients.

Gas Tax Receipts Show Increase This eYar

Although there are almost 100,000 fewer cars being used in Michigan this year, as compared with 1931, gasoline tax receipts have increased, it was revealed by Secretary of State Frank D. Fitzgerald. For the first quarter of the year the 3 cent levy produced $4,115,381, an increase of $173,815 over the corresponding period of 1931, he reported. The increase is due to greater use of cars and to more rigid enforcement of the gas tax law.

METAL "CREEP" STUDY AN AID TO INDUSTRIES

Creep of metal, a continuous but almost imperceptible change in size or shape which occurs in this supposedly solid material, has been measured by the University of Michigan Department of Engineering Research with special instruments, giving for the first time continuous readings accurate to one-millionth of an inch. Results of the research are expected to be of fundamental importance to many industries who must design metal parts for use at high temperatures.

When a steel beam or other part is placed under stress there is a usual permanent amount of bend, easily determined beforehand, but when high temperature is also present the metal also "creeps" or continues to change shape with extreme slowness, but with results that may amount to serious deformation in the course of a year. With industry tending more and more toward the use of high temperature and high pressure to increase efficiency from power plant boilers and oil refining apparatus, accurate means of predicting creep changes becomes of wide importance in the design of reliable and safe machinery. With some metals, such as lead, an unusually high temperature is not needed to set up creep, which injures lead telephone cable sheathing and like articles.

Several methods of measuring creep were developed by Professor Stephen Timoshenko and Dr. F. L. Everett in the University Engineering Research laboratories. The most accurate method devised consists of a new application of twisting force instead of the pulling commonly used and employs a system of mirrors attached to the specimen which, together with telescope and graduated scales permit detection of extremely minute creep movements. Professor Timoshenko and Dr. Everett, who spent last summer in Europe, are continuing their research in this line, which has been recognized by German scientists working in the same field.

MAY DAY PARTY DRAWS CROWD

Before a large and appreciative audience the children in the primary and intermediate grades and the Girl's Glee of the Pinckney school presented a program of folk songs and dances last Saturday afternoon.

The celebration took place on the school lawn. Lilacs were used as part of the decorations, and with the bright colored costumes of the children the party was a festive affair.

The party opened with the crowning of the May Queen, Clare Ledwide, who had been elected for that honor by the members of the Glee Club. Her attendants were Maids McCleer and Constance Darrow of the high school department and Jeanne Clark, Janette Haines and Dorothy Meabon from the primary room. Lois Kennedy and Jeanne Clinton acted as heralds.

The folk dances ranged historically from one of the oldest of which there is any record, the English dance "Looby Loo" to a comparatively modern one known as "Today's the First of May." German, Swedish Danish and American dances were also included in the program.

The children participating in the performance evidently enjoyed their activity as much as did the observers.

Indians of Mixed Blood

The Mohican Indians of whom James Fenimore Cooper wrote in the "Last of the Mohicans" were a group of tribes of Algonquin Indians which formerly lived in Connecticut and New York. Many of the Mohicans lost their identity by mingling with the Delaware, Iroquois and other tribes of Indians, but notwithstanding Cooper's story, mixed blood remnants still survive in the vicinity of Norwich, Conn., and Stockbridge, Mass. The notorious Pequots were a renegade group of the original Mohicans.—Detroit News.

Goethe's Poetic Rank

John George Robertson, professor of German language and literature of the University of London, says that "as a lyric poet Goethe's supremacy is least likely to be challenged. He has given his nation, whose highest literary expression has in all ages been essentially lyric, its greatest songs. No other German poet has succeeded in attuning feeling, sentiment and thought so perfectly to the music of words as he; none has expressed so fully that subtle spirituality in which the strength of German lyrism lies."
