

Current Comment

In Canada the old adage of "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" still holds good. We read that at Pembroke, Ontario, Allan Cowan, a baby-farmer, was on February 27 sentenced to be hanged on February 27, for the murder of his brother, as the climax of a love triangle. In this country there would be appeals, as the captions filed and various delays. Such things are unheard of in Canada where justice is swift, sure and certain and old country idiosyncrasies predominate. However, in this case, justice might better be served with a little mercy.

Do you bee-keepers know that you are required by law to register and pay a registration fee? Many bee-keepers have neglected to do this and as a result the apicary division of the state department of agriculture is cracking down on them. In Jackson county they have requested the prosecuting attorney to start court action against all persons keeping bees who have not paid the registration fee. The law provides a heavy penalty for those who fail to register. The registration fees are used to pay for proper registration and regulation of the avary industry. So if you have not registered you had better do so.

The entire country came to be greatly interested in the congressional election in the third district. The Vermont Main, the Republican candidate is an outspoken advocate of the Town-and Old Age Pension Plan and in making his campaign with this as the leading issue. As a result, many leading Republicans who had agreed to campaign for him, have sent protest, among these are Senator Vandenberg. Governor Fitzgerald has confirmed his efforts to a radio address in which he said if that the Town and plan has captured the support of millions, and that the sentiment of the country favors a program designed to bring security to people in their old age. In other words, though the governor does not endorse the plan, he admits its overwhelming power. In this, undoubtedly his action will be followed by many other politicians, with the result that next year the primaries will be filled with Townsend Pension candidates. All this will put the Republicans in an embarrassing position with their economy platform and opposition to the New Deal, as the Town-and Plan unfolds in all its details. Many Democrats are conceding Maine's election, as they think he will get a fourth Democratic radical vote to offset his loss of conservative Republican votes.

Bruno Hauptmann is making his last fight for life against execution in the Landberg kidnapping case. No evidence seems to have turned up that would justify the conviction of New Jersey in the matter, and a commutation to life imprisonment or an extension of time may be granted. But the state insists on the people that Hauptmann is sufficiently guilty to merit his execution. He was undoubtedly the brains of the enterprise and, although others may have been implicated, most of the blame rests on his shoulders. The case was bungled by the authorities from start to finish, but never the less they were able to convict him.

The center, McCrea, of Wayne county has taken the Metropolitan Milk Dealers, an organization of dairy men in Wayne county, into court to compel them to reduce the price of milk. He has threatened to put W. J. Kennedy, head of the company in jail unless he reduces the price of milk from 12c to 11c. Kennedy is filled on oath that he nor the association had anything to do with the increased price which was set by the Michigan Milk Producers Association, who control the source of supply.

At the present time the two leading candidates for the Republican presidential nomination are Senator Borah of Idaho and Governor Land of Kansas. The latter, at present, has put forward no platform but Senator Borah is willing to make his principal plank the crushing of monopolies.

The thesis expounded by Senator Borah is simple. The "prosperity" of 1929 was a delusion and a deception. During that flaunting period "70 percent of the entire population was compelled to live on an income that afforded nothing more than the bare necessities of life, and one-fifth of the entire population were living on less than the bare necessities of life measured by any decent standard of living." These estimates were based on the Brookings Institute report, which seems to be gaining its political significance day by day.

Why were half the people existing below a decent standard? Not because of overproduction, says Mr. Borah; they could have used everything produced, and more. But they couldn't get it because of a miscalculation of purchasing power. And the way to spread it, in the Senator's opinion, is to smash monopoly.

That this will favor with the conservative Republicans is doubtful. Theodore Roosevelt Jr. has said that he is against it as a leading issue. At the present time Chairman Fletcher is soliciting these monopolies for campaign funds.

EGG GRADING REGULATIONS

Egg grading regulations which will assure quality products to the consuming public will go into effect in Michigan, January 1, Commissioner of Agriculture, James F. Thomson, announced today.

The regulations call for four grades of eggs, Fancy, and Grade A-B and C. The regulations are similar to those issued some time ago, but later rescinded, except that the license feature has been eliminated under the new plan. Permits to deal in eggs will be issued free of charge by the department of agriculture.

"Michigan is the forty-first state in the union to adopt egg grading regulations," Thomson declared. "It is an advanced step and will tend to stop the traffic in inedible eggs. Grades are set up strictly on a quality basis. The sale of eggs by weight is not required under the new regulations, but is advocated to a certain extent."

At the same time Commissioner Thomson has issued additional egg grading regulations under which eggs can be sold under the Michigan bonded Farm Produce Plan. Only the two highest grades can qualify for sale under this program, which was set up some time ago by the department of agriculture. The bonded program applies to Michigan eggs only and will carry a bonded label supplied by the department of agriculture, which assures the consuming public that the eggs are of two grade eggs must be of uniform size and the weight not less than 22 oz. to a dozen.

With surrounding states having egg grading regulations Michigan has become the dumping ground for all eggs that have failed to meet the requirements in these states, the Commissioner pointed out. The new regulations in Michigan will prevent this practice, Thomson says. The Commissioner pointed out that strict enforcement of the potato grading law in Michigan has resulted in premium prices being paid for Michigan grown potatoes on the Chicago market this year. The same will apply to eggs.

"There is no reason why a consumer should not be able to go into a store in Michigan and buy eggs that are known to be up to grade. The department of agriculture is going further than this, in showing the public that they can get the highest quality eggs all of a uniform size with the distributor bonded with the state."

AN APPEAL TO ALL DRIVERS

An appeal to Michigan drivers to use care and intelligence on the roads in 1936 will go to every operator applying to the Secretary of State's office for license renewal.

The appeal, bearing a picture of a man carrying an injured child in his arms and signed by Orville E. Atwood, secretary of state, reads:

"This license, which has been granted you to operate a motor vehicle is more than a legal privilege. It carries with it a tremendous moral responsibility.

"There are traffic emergencies awaiting you—a human life may depend on your attitude. How will you drive?"

All branches of the State Department are being stocked, in addition, with the State Safety Council's safe-driving pledges and windshield stickers for distribution to applicants for license plates.

RULES FOR SAFE DRIVING

The Saginaw News has hit upon the valuable device of interviewing automobile drivers of excellent driving records and asking them how they do it, in the belief that what they say may help others. Subject of latest two-column cut and one-column interview is Ernest G. Maxwell, Saginaw Motor Bus Co., who has driven 200,000 miles in 10 years and whose only accident was denting a fender when another car cut in front of his bus.

Says Maxwell: "A good driver anticipates the mistakes the other fellow is likely to make."

"I'm always watching for the fellow who drives furiously alongside the bus, then turns without warning, either right or left. He depends on the vehicle following him to stop quickly enough to avoid an accident."

"Another fellow who gives trouble is the one who stops without warning. I've made it a habit for that reason, always to keep a safe distance behind the car ahead of me."

"They're not the only ones who make things dangerous. There is also the fellow who pulls over to the right side of the road when he means to make a turn to the left, and his partner in crime who does just the opposite. There's also that fellow who stays right in the middle of the road and defies anybody to budge him."

BLACK BASS SEASON CLOSES DECEMBER 31
The season for taking black bass in Michigan comes to a close for the year, Tuesday, December 31, the Department of Conservation announced today. Black bass will not be legal game again until June 25.

Ice fishermen, however, are permitted to take all species of non-game fish and many other species of game fish except brook, brown, rainbow trout and grayling.

The two-month season for spearing through the ice opens January 1. This season is open during January and February on all inland waters, except trout streams and waters not otherwise closed to spearing. The use of artificial light while spearing is forbidden.

The species of fish that may legally be taken with the spear are: carp, suckers, mullet, redhorse, sheep head, lake trout, smelt, great northern grass pike and pickerel, muskellunge, whitefish, muskie, pike, gar, minnow, whitefish, dogfish and gar.

APPEAL SCHEDULED IN GAS TAX SUIT

Announcement that the long-standing litigation between the State of Michigan and the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana is nearing its semi-final stages, has been made by Orville E. Atwood, Secretary of State, who "inherited" the lawsuit which had its inception five years ago. The state seeks to collect approximately $90,000 from the petroleum firm for gasoline taxes allegedly owed over the period from 1925 to 1929; hearing of the matter is scheduled for the current term of the U. S. Court of Appeals at Cincinnati, with arguments to be heard probably in March. Oddly enough, the state is defendant, the oil firm seeking an injunction to prevent the Secretary of State from revoking the license of the Standard Oil Company and thus affecting some 1,000 gasoline stations operated by that company in Michigan in 1930.

The gas tax law, enacted in 1925, provided that the gasoline taxes should at all times be computed on a receipts basis. In 1929, the law was amended to provide that if gasoline is received in marine terminal storage tanks by licensed distributors, the tax may be computed when withdrawn from these tanks, rather than when received. The concession recognized evaporation and shrinkage in the huge tanks which held large amounts of gasoline received prior to closing of the Great Lakes to shipping each winter. The state contended, however, that the Standard Oil Company of Indiana had been paying the gas tax on this revised basis since 1925, and moved to collect the alleged deficiency.

The state originally sought more than $1,000,000, one item being the $98,000 cost of an audit of the firm's records ordered by the state. The bulk of the state's original claim was based on interpretation of the 1925 act as it pertained to shrinkage and loss allowance between distributor and retailer. The latter two claims were set aside by the Master in Chancery in Detroit; the decision upholding the state in its first contention was appealed.

THREE-DAY WINTER CAMP TO BE HELD AT NEWBARK

The Washtenaw-Livingston council will conduct a winter camp January 2, 3 and 4 of next year at Camp Newbark.

Although the camp is open to all scouts, patrol and other troop leaders are particularly desired for the leadership training to be gained. Efforts are being made to have each troop represented at the camp.

Since membership will be limited to 40 scouts and leaders, early registration is necessary to secure a place.

The camp will begin with breakfast Thursday morning and will continue through until Saturday at 4 p. m.

The program will include winter tracking, camping, leadership training, and opportunities for advancement.

Executive Walter MacPeak will be Camp Director and will be assisted by several Scoutmasters.

COUNCIL WILL PARTICIPATE IN COMPETITIVE FIRST AID CONTESTS THIS WINTER

An opportunity for all scouts to perfect their knowledge of first aid will be provided in a series of progressive contests this winter. Although similar state-wide contests have been held before, this will be the first time that the Washtenaw-Livingston council has participated.

First, there will be a competition in the troop, having the patrol competing against each other. The winners of the troops' competitions will represent their troops in the inter-troop contest. The best patrol of the neighborhood meet will enter the district meet. The winner of this meet will go to the sectional meeting to compete with other council winners for the South-Eastern Michigan Championship.

There will be seven steps to the finals of the contest which will be held near Chicago about April 23rd or 24th with the champion patrol of all Michigan.

Scout Executive Walter MacPeak says: "This series of first aid contests is a real opportunity for every patrol and every troop to show their skill and knowledge."

HONEY CAN BE USED TO MAKE FINE FOODS

Michigan honey can be used in baked goods, candy, canned goods, salads, desserts and drinks to replace part or all of the sugar ordinarily called for in the recipes according to the home economic department at Michigan State College.

A delicious candy can be made entirely from farm products. Cut pieces of apple and simmer them in honey until the pieces are clear, then remove and roll in chopped nuts. The pieces also can be rolled in coconut or can be coated with chocolate.

Honey bittersweet is more difficult to make but rewards the patience of those who master the art. Place a section of comb honey in the refrigerator for 24 hours, then cut into pieces three-fourths inch long and three-eighths inch wide. Place the pieces on waxed paper on trays and chill for 30 minutes. Prepare chocolate for dipping and keep it over water at a temperature of not over 120 degrees. Dip the pieces of honey and drop a nut meat on each piece. The children will save any pieces which are not coated thickly enough to keep the honey from dripping.

Honey is about one-fifth water so the amount of water called for by the recipe should be reduced by one-fifth for every cupful of honey used to replace sugar. Each tablespoon of honey supplies from 65 to 100 calories. It is easily digested, is slightly laxative, and contains a small amount of minerals.

Extension Bulletin No. 150 contains many recipes for the use of honey. This will be sent to anyone requesting it from the Bulletin Clerk of East Lansing.

Howell, Brighton and Fowlerville are now assured of natural gas to take the place of the artificial gas which has been piped to them from Lansing for several years. Gas engineers started work on the new pipe line will be started at once. A 20 percent reduction in gas is looked for.

ICE FISHING REGULATIONS

Michigan's new ice-fishing regulations for inland waters, which have been the subject of controversy in sportsmen's circles, will go into effect throughout the state January 1.

The new regulation limit the inland-lake fishermen to the use of two ice-lines with not more than one hook attached to each line and require that these lines be held in hand and under immediate control.

The regulations also apply to the "tip-up" or any similar mechanical device used for the taking of fish from the inland waters. No more than two "tip-ups" may be used by an individual fisherman and these must be under immediate control.

There is one exception to these regulations, explained Fred A. Westerman, chief of Michigan's fisheries operations. Smelt fishermen are recognized smelt waters are also restricted to the use of two lines, but may use any number of hooks on a line.

The two ice-line regulations, however, do not apply to the Great Lakes or connecting waters of the Great Lakes where five ice-lines, the number allowed last winter, is still legal.

MUST GIVE DRIVING RECORD

Of late, a great many applications for operators' licenses have been rejected and in a goodly number of instances, prosecutions for perjury have been instigated because the applicant had failed to state a former driving record on the application.

It is very evident that too few of our motorists realize that under the Statute making drivers' licenses compulsory, that he must state whether or not he has been convicted of any offense pertaining to traffic prior to making application for license. Section 23, of Act 91, P. A. 1931, reads as follows:

"Any person who shall make any false affidavit, or shall knowingly swear or affirm falsely, to any matter or thing required by the terms of this Act to be sworn to or affirmed, shall be guilty of perjury and upon conviction shall be punishable by fine or imprisonment or other process committing perjury are punishable."

It is found that in a great many instances, through lack of proper cooperation on the part of notaries throughout the state, before whom these oaths are taken, that prosecutions are feasible because of the fact that too few of the notaries actually swear the applicant, make him take off his hat and raise his right hand, as prescribed by law. But, remember this, Mr. Driver, whether or not the notary fails to properly execute his duty in this regard, your application will be rejected if the records on file in the Lansing Office show that you have been convicted for traffic violations prior to making application. It might also be well to state that drastic action is contemplated by the Executive Offices toward revoking commissions of notaries found to be failing to comply in this regard.

The secretary read the report of the last meeting, and other routine business was disposed of. Several cards were directed sent to the sick and shut-ins, and a birthday postcard shower was decided on for Rev. and Mrs. Zuse for December 14 and 15.

Our best wishes go to our paragon people as they reach these milestones in their lives.

"I shall be. I never appreciated Hurtle until now. I was too silly, vain—feather-headed. I have realized it since knowing Marcia."

"We all want to be different after we have seen Marcia," Stanley Heath said gently.

"We don't just want to be—we set about it," was the girl's grave reply.

"Sit down, Sylvia, and let us talk of Marcia," ventured Heath after a pause. "I am deeply sorry if I have wounded her—indeed I am."

The girl reached his face. "I cannot understand you, Mr. Heath," she said. "What has Marcia done that you should have left her as you did? Isn't she believed in as a character and a thinker? Stood up for everybody—going it for the best? Few women would have had such faith in a stranger."

"I realize that. You do not need to tell me," he answered. "It is precisely because she has gone so far I believed her capable of going farther yet—the whole way."

"What do you mean by the whole way?"

"To the end."

"Well, hasn't she?"

He shook his head.

"No. She has fallen short—disappointed me cruelly. When it came to the final test, her affection collapsed. Oh, she has been wonderful," he added quickly. "Do not think I fail to appreciate that. She has far out-distanced every other woman I ever have known. I simply expected too much of her, doubtless the impossible. Human nature is frail—a woman's heart the frailest thing of all. I have always said so."

"You wrong Marcia," cried Sylvia hotly. "Her heart is not frail. Neither is she the weak sort of person you have pictured. In all the world you could not match her loyalty or the depth of her affection. If after the experience we three have lived through together you have not discovered what she is, it is futile for me to attempt to show you."

"You came into our lives like a meteor—entirely detached from everything. We knew nothing about you and in the face of damaging evidence you offered neither Marcia nor me one word of explanation. Marcia asked none. Without rhyme or reason she believed in you. I had not her faith. I freely confess I thought you guilty. Oh, I liked you sufficiently well to be ready to help you save your skin. But Marcia cared enough for you to want you to save your soul."

"When you were taken ill, we both nursed you—I willingly, she devotedly. Here lay another difference had you been able to detect it. What happened as a result of this enforced intimacy? You know—know far better than I."

"I fell in love with Marcia," replied the man without an instant's hesitation.

"You fell in love!" Sylvia repeated, her lip curling. "You call it love—the poor thing you offered her! Why, Marcia would have gone to the world's end with you, Stanley Heath, had she the right. She would have faced any humiliation for your sake. If prison doors closed upon you, she would have remained faithful until they swung open and afterward followed you to any corner of the earth in which you chose to begin a new life."

"That's where you're wrong, Sylvia," contradicted Heath. "Marcia was not ready to do that. I tried her out and she refused. When I told her I should return to her, and asked her in so many words whether she was willing to face shame and public scorn for my sake she turned her back on me. She could not go to that length."

"Are you sure she understood?" asked Sylvia, stepping nearer and looking fearlessly into his eyes. "There is a shame Marcia never in this world would face for any man; but it is not the shame you have just described."

"It is the shame of wronging another woman; destroying a home. In the village where we have been brought up, we believe in marriage as a sacred, enduring sacrament—not a bond to be lightly broken. When you offered Marcia less than that—"

"I never offered Marcia any such shameful position, Sylvia," cried Stanley Heath. "I would not so far insult her."

"But you are married."

"That is a lie. Who told you so?"

"The wire to Mrs. Stanley Heath—the telephone message. I heard you call her Joan."

"But, Sylvia, Mrs. Stanley Heath is not my wife. She is my young step-mother, my father's widow. I always have called her Joan."

"Oh! I beg your pardon."

"I see it all now," the man explained. "You have entirely misunderstood the situation. I'm a Junior. Since my father's death, however, people have got out of the way of using the term. Sometimes I myself am careless about it. So Marcia thought—"

"Of course she did. We both did. How were we to know?" Sylvia demanded.

"How, indeed? If an innocent citizen cannot visit a town without being arrested as a criminal within a week of his arrival, why shouldn't he be married without his knowledge. Circumstantial evidence can, apparently, work wonders."

Then suddenly he threw back his head and laughed.

"Bless you, little Sylvia—bless you for setting me right. I told you you were a brick and you've proved it. Thanks to you, everything is now straightened out. Here, give me your hand. How am I to thank you for what you have done? I only hope that young Horatio Fuller of yours realizes what a treasure he is getting."

"He does, Mr. Heath—he does," observed that gentleman, strolling at the same instant through the door and encircling his tiny bride-to-be with his arm. "Haven't I traveled half way across this big country of ours to marry her?"

"Oh, we're not going to be married yet, Hurtle," demurred the girl trying to wrench herself free of the big fellow's hold.

"Certainly we are, my dear. Didn't I tell you this morning I came to get married? I was perfectly serious. Dad gave me two months vacation with that understanding. I must either produce a wife when I get home or lose my job."

"Looks to me as if you had Mr. Fuller's future prosperity in your hands, Sylvia," Heath said.

"She has. She can make or break me. A big responsibility, eh, little Sylvia?"

"I know it, Hurtle," retorted the girl seriously.

"She is equal to it, Fuller—never fear," Stanley Heath asserted.

"I'm not doing any worrying," smiled Horatio. "I—"

The sentence was cut short by the radio's loudspeaker:

"The much sought Long Island gem thief was captured this morning at his lodgings in Jersey City. Harris Chambers, alias Jimmie O'Hara, a paroled prisoner, was taken by the police at his room on K—street. A quantity of loot, together with firearms and the missing jewels were found concealed in the apartment. The man readily admitted the theft. He has a long prison record."

For a second nobody spoke.

Then as if prompted by common impulse, the three on the piazza rushed indoors.

"Elisha was sitting limply before the radio."

"Did you hear that?" he gasped.

"Well, rather!" Horatio Fuller shouted with a triumphant wave of his hand.

"Ain't it the beatest?" exploded the astonished sheriff. "That sends the whole case up in the air. All that's needed now to make me out the darndest fool on God's earth is for Eleazer's young nephew-lawyer in New York, who's checking up Heath's story, to wire everything there is O. K. If he does, I'll go bury my head. There goes the telephone! That's him! That's Eleazer—I'll bet a hat."

"Hello!—Yes, I heard it—You ain't surprised? Wal, I am. I'm took off my feet—Oh, your nephew wired, did he, an' everything's O. K.? That bein' the case, I reckon there's no more to be said. I feel like a shrimp. How do you feel?"

Elisha hung up the receiver.

"Wal, Mr. Heath, the story you told Eleazer an' me is straight as a string in every particular," he announced.

"You're free! There ain't nothin' I can say. To tell you I'm sorry ain't in no way adequate. You'll just have to set me down as one of them pudding-headed idiots that was over-ambitious to do his duty."

"It was outrageous of you, insulting, to leave a thing of this sort for Marcia."

"I shall not let it go at that, Mr. Winslow," Stanley Heath exclaimed, stepping to the old man's side and seizing his palm in a strong grip.

"We all make errors. Forget it. I'm going to. Besides, you have treated me like a prince since I've been your guest."

"You are the prince, sir. Livin' with you has shown me that. Wal, anyhow, all ain't been lost. At least I've met a thoroughbred an' that ain't none too frequent an occurrence in these days."

"What I can't understand, Mr. Winslow, is why you didn't recognize he was a thoroughbred from the beginning," Horatio Fuller remarked.

"You're a right to berate me, young man—a perfect right. I ain't goin' to put up no defense. 'Twas the circumstances that blinded me. Besides, I had only a single glimpse of Mr. Heath. Remember that. After he was took sick I never saw him again. Had we got acquainted, as we have now, everything would 'a' been different. Findin' them jewels—"

"Great hat, man! I had a diamond ring in my pocket when I came to Wilton, but that didn't prove I'd stolen it."

"I know! I know!" acquiesced the sheriff. "Eleazer an' me lost our bearin's entirely. We got completely turned round."

"A thief with a Phi Beta Kappa key!" jeered Horatio. "Godfrey!" Then turning to Sylvia, he added in an undertone: "Well, so far as I can see the only person who has kept her head through this affair is our Aunt Marcia."

Elisha overheard the final clause.

"That's right!" he agreed with cordiality. "The Wildder's head-piece can always be relied upon to stay steady."

"Whose head-piece?" inquired Stanley Heath, puzzled by the term.

"Marcia's. Here in town we call her The Wildder."

"Well, you'll not have the opportunity to call her that much longer," Heath laughed.

"You don't tell me!" Elisha regarded him, open-mouthed. "Humph! So that's how the wind blows, is it? Wal, I can see this mix-up would 'a' ended my chances anyway. Marcia'd never have had me after this. Disappointed as I am, though, there's a slight of comfort in knowin' she won't have Eleazer neither. He don't come out of the shindy a whit better'n me. That's somethin'. In fact it's a heap!"

CHAPTER XIII

Intense as was the joy of the three persons, who a little later set out toward the Homestead in the old yellow dory, they were a silent trio.

Too much of seriousness had happened during the morning for them to dispel its aftermath lightly.

Horatio, pulling at the oars, was unusually earnest, Sylvia turned the ring on her finger reflectively and Stanley Heath looked far out over the water, too deep in thought to be conscious of either of them.

When, however, the boat swung into the channel, Sylvia spoke.

"Hurtle and I are not coming with you, Mr. Heath," she said. "We will stay behind. Only do, please, promise me one thing. Do not tell Marcia the whole story before we have a chance to hear it. There are ever so many connecting links I am curious beyond words to have you supply."

"Such as—?"

"The jewels in the first place. I can hardly wait to have that mystery solved."

Stanley laughed.

"The jewels are no mystery at all. I can satisfy your mind about those here and now. They were Joan's—Mrs. Heath's. Her maid, Corinne, took them and disappeared. Soon afterward, purely by accident, I met Paul Latimer, a friend who lives on Long Island, and during the course of our conversation, he asked if I knew a good man servant, saying that Julien, their butler, had just given notice that he was to be married to Corinne, the new parlor maid, and return with her to France."

"The woman's name instantly caught my attention."

"Why shouldn't I do a bit of sleuthing on my own account?"

"Thus far the detectives Joan and I had hired had made no headway at locating the jewels."

"Why shouldn't I have a try at it myself? I got a boat and cruised along to the Latimers' at whose house I had frequently stayed, and with the habits of whose household I was familiar. My plan was to arrive early in the morning before the family was astrir and catch the parlor-maid alone at her work."

"Should she prove to be our Corinne, I would boldly confront her with the theft and demand the jewels; if, on the other hand, she turned out to be another person altogether, it would be perfectly easy to explain my presence by falling back on my acquaintance with Paul."

"It seemed, on thinking the matter over, that this would be a far more considerate course anyway than to drag in the detectives, not only because I had no real evidence to present to them, but also because of my friendship for the Latimers and for Julien, who had been in their employ many years. I knew they esteemed him very highly and would be dreadfully cut up should they find him involved in an affair as unpleasant as this one. Besides, I felt practically certain he had had nothing to do with the crime. He was too fine—one of the old-fashioned, devoted type of servant."

"To shame such a man and throw suspicion on him if he were blameless would be a pity, especially just on the eve of his resigning from service. It might mean that instead of leaving with the gratitude and good-will of his employers, he might be sent away under a cloud. I did not wish that to happen."

"Well, my scheme worked to a dot. I reached the Latimers' unobserved; found Corinne alone straightening up the library; faced her and demanded the jewels."

"The instant she saw me she knew the game was up, and, without more ado, produced the gems from her pocket, shouldering all the blame."

"Julien, she protested, knew nothing of the theft. He was a self-respecting, honest man. Should he be told of what she had done it would end everything between them. She loved him. Indeed it was because of him she had committed the crime."

"It proved they had been engaged some time and long before had agreed to save their money and sometime pool it so they might be married and buy a little home in France."

CHAPTER XIII

Intense as was the joy of the three persons, who a little later set out toward the Homestead in the old yellow dory, they were a silent trio.

Too much of seriousness had happened during the morning for them to dispel its aftermath lightly.

Horatio, pulling at the oars, was unusually earnest, Sylvia turned the ring on her finger reflectively and Stanley Heath looked far out over the water, too deep in thought to be conscious of either of them.

When, however, the boat swung into the channel, Sylvia spoke.

"Hurtle and I are not coming with you, Mr. Heath," she said. "We will stay behind. Only do, please, promise me one thing. Do not tell Marcia the whole story before we have a chance to hear it. There are ever so many connecting links I am curious beyond words to have you supply."

"Such as—?"

"The jewels in the first place. I can hardly wait to have that mystery solved."

Stanley laughed.

"The jewels are no mystery at all. I can satisfy your mind about those here and now. They were Joan's—Mrs. Heath's. Her maid, Corinne, took them and disappeared. Soon afterward, purely by accident, I met Paul Latimer, a friend who lives on Long Island, and during the course of our conversation, he asked if I knew a good man servant, saying that Julien, their butler, had just given notice that he was to be married to Corinne, the new parlor maid, and return with her to France."

"The woman's name instantly caught my attention."

"Why shouldn't I do a bit of sleuthing on my own account?"

"Thus far the detectives Joan and I had hired had made no headway at locating the jewels."

"Why shouldn't I have a try at it myself? I got a boat and cruised along to the Latimers' at whose house I had frequently stayed, and with the habits of whose household I was familiar. My plan was to arrive early in the morning before the family was astrir and catch the parlor-maid alone at her work."

"Should she prove to be our Corinne, I would boldly confront her with the theft and demand the jewels; if, on the other hand, she turned out to be another person altogether, it would be perfectly easy to explain my presence by falling back on my acquaintance with Paul."

"It seemed, on thinking the matter over, that this would be a far more considerate course anyway than to drag in the detectives, not only because I had no real evidence to present to them, but also because of my friendship for the Latimers and for Julien, who had been in their employ many years. I knew they esteemed him very highly and would be dreadfully cut up should they find him involved in an affair as unpleasant as this one. Besides, I felt practically certain he had had nothing to do with the crime. He was too fine—one of the old-fashioned, devoted type of servant."

"To shame such a man and throw suspicion on him if he were blameless would be a pity, especially just on the eve of his resigning from service. It might mean that instead of leaving with the gratitude and good-will of his employers, he might be sent away under a cloud. I did not wish that to happen."

"Well, my scheme worked to a dot. I reached the Latimers' unobserved; found Corinne alone straightening up the library; faced her and demanded the jewels."

"The instant she saw me she knew the game was up, and, without more ado, produced the gems from her pocket, shouldering all the blame."

"Julien, she protested, knew nothing of the theft. He was a self-respecting, honest man. Should he be told of what she had done it would end everything between them. She loved him. Indeed it was because of him she had committed the crime."

"It proved they had been engaged some time and long before had agreed to save their money and sometime pool it so they might be married and buy a little home in France."

Isle Ranks High in Cleanliness

Lanai was a cattle ranch 20 years ago, but today is noted for pheasants and pineapples. Sixth island in size in the Hawaiian group, its Lanai City is called the most immaculately kept American municipality in all the islands. Roofs are painted in various colors, streets are shaded by Norfolk pines and yards glow with hibiscus blooms and flowering trees.

Grandmother Believes Health and Wealth Responsibilities

Asserting that their grandmother is "old-fashioned and ignorant of modern methods of life," the two grandchildren of a famous financier publicly asked for her removal as their guardian.

The shortcomings of which these children of sixteen and seventeen complain on the part of their grandmother are not with reference to knowledge of financial affairs.

It is not her faults as an investor of which they complain in asking to have her removed as their guardian. No. The matters in which she is "too old-fashioned" doubtless come closer—in their opinion—than that!

Probably she is old-fashioned in such annoying matters as health. At her age she may be foolish enough to imagine that at sixteen and seventeen one is still growing mentally and physically, and that wholesome living is of paramount importance. Probably she cannot see the benefit of burning the candle at both ends. Faced with a choice between dancing and sleep, she is probably unreasonable enough on occasions to rule out the dancing.

And perhaps she is old-fashioned in money matters. Having been accustomed to wealth long enough to have a true sense of values, she probably objects to extravagance. Too old to see clearly, she probably feels that merely having money is no reason for dissipating. Indeed she may even feel the possession of wealth as a responsibility, and try to train her grandchildren to self-respecting handling of it from that point of view.

Being old-fashioned, she may feel, too, that having money is not enough to bring one complete satisfaction in life. She may be urging them to sow the seeds of future usefulness—and therefore content and happiness—in study and serious thought about taking their place in the world as the grandchildren of a man who from humble beginnings became the ruler of millions. That, of course, would seriously interfere with their preoccupation of having a good time.

Yes, the grandmother is doubtless old-fashioned in all of those ways. And they are ways which can be very annoying when one is sixteen or seventeen with plenty of money and no dearth of people who are quite willing to let one be one's own master.

As Blacks Remembered, They Raised Memorial

Death came to two white traders in Africa who had made friends with the natives in a certain village. Their black brothers wished to raise to them a fitting memorial. They put up a stone, and carved on it—a whisky bottle and a pack of cards.

The incident is recalled by Rev. "Dick" Sheppard, in the Illustrated Weekly of India.

Smiles

A FLIER

"Did you fish with flies?" asked the boy of his friend who had spent the summer at camp.

"Fish with them?" replied the other. "We fished with them, ate with them and slept with them!"

A Fresh One

A college professor and his wife entertained at dinner a few weeks ago. In the midst of the gayety at the table a child's voice was heard coming from the floor above.

"Mother!"

"What is it, Archie?" she asked.

"There's only clean towels in the bathroom. Shall I start one?"

Interference

"Are you still writing profound articles?" asked the lady with a roll of manuscript.

"No," answered Miss Cayenne, "I found it interfered with my more serious duties. You can't spill ink and pour tea simultaneously."
