Over Mt. Everest

Aviators have succeeded in flying over the top of Mount Everest, the highest mountain in the world. Rear Admiral P. F. M. Fellowes, D. S. O., rose to a height of 34,000 feet in a temperature ranging down to -76 degrees Fahrenheit in 1934. In his flight over the mountain he cleared the peak by a bare 100 feet. The Houston Moun' Everest flight cleared the peak on April 3 and 19, 1933.

Stomach Gas

So Bad Seems To Hurt Heart

"The gas on my stomach was so bad I could not eat or sleep. Even my heart seemed to hurt. A friend suggested Adlerika. The first dose I took brought me relief. Now I eat as I wish, sleep fine and never feel better."—Mrs. J. L. Smith, New York, reports: "Adlerika acts on BOTH upper and lower bowels while ordinary laxatives act on the lower bowels only. Adlerika gives your system a thorough cleansing, bringing out old, poisonous matter that you would not believe was in your system and that has been causing gas, pain, sour stomach, nervousness and headaches for months." Dr. H. L. Smith, New York, reports: "In addition to intestinal cleansing, Adlerika greatly reduces bacteria and colon bacilli. Give your bowels a REAL cleansing with Adlerika and see how good you feel. Just one spoonful relieves GAS and stubborn constipation. At all leading druggists."

YOU CAN THROW CARDS IN HIS FACE ONCE TOO OFTEN

WHEN you have those awful cramps when your nerves are all on edge—don't take it out on the man you love. Your husband can't possibly know how you feel for the simple reason that he is a man. A three-quarter wife may be so wise as all if she nags her husband seven days out of every month. For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus eliminating the discomforts from the functional disorders which cause such undue in the three states of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Advancing "middle age." Don't be a three-quarter wife. Take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and go "smiling through."

National Topics Interpreted

by William Bruckart

Washington.—More perhaps than ever before in our country's history, the courts of the nation, federal and state, are in a jam. They are being subjected to a greater strain than ever before and, I think, the strain is too great for them long to continue to bear it.

That sentence sounds sensational. It is meant to be. In the opinion of many sound thinkers, men and women of vision, there has never been a time when a wave or surge has attacked the courts or any other American institution with such ferocity.

One of the reasons the situation is to be regarded with so much concern is President Roosevelt's latest request of congress for a reorganization of the judiciary system. He is asking for more judges everywhere which, of itself, seems entirely proper, but the message astounded observers by proposing an increase in the membership of the Supreme court of the United States to fifteen. That is to say that if it were enacted into law, Mr. Roosevelt's own proposal would give him authority to select six additional justices of the highest tribunal. Inasmuch as the present membership of the court has refused a number of times to hold New Deal legislation valid under the Constitution, it takes no stretch of the imagination at all to figure out that Mr. Roosevelt's proposal would give him authority to select a sufficient number of new justices so that the New Deal would hold the balance of power in the highest court of the judiciary of the country.

There may be and probably is merit in the President's proposal that judges should retire at seventy years of age. It happens that the present membership of the court includes six men who are above that age and a statute compelling retirement at seventy would make six added vacancies in the court unless the present court should find that this law itself is unconstitutional in one regard. The judges are appointed for life and they cannot be removed without cause—which means they must be impeached by congress and tried.

The message respecting reorganization of the judiciary system was by far the most sensational to come from Mr. Roosevelt as President. He pointed out in it that he had proposed reorganization of the executive branch of the government so that it might function more efficiently. The next step, he said, was to reorganize the judiciary so that it could administer justice more speedily. But there are many minds throughout the country which find it difficult to believe that the necessity for speedy justice is the fundamental reason for the new proposal.

It is too early to tell, of course, how congress will act on the President's suggestion, but the more astute observers here are quite convinced that such legislation cannot go through without a bitter debate. The political implications are many. If a real struggle develops in the house or the senate, it is not outside the range of a good guess to predict that it could split the tremendous Democratic majority asunder in either house. If it did that once, undoubtedly enemies and factions would be created that would continue through the remainder of the President's new term and only the passage of time can disclose how far reaching such a thing might be.

But let us review for a moment some of the background of the conditions that have preceded the President's sensational proposal. There have been sniping and bushwhacking at the judiciary for a number of years and this was thrown into high speed by the President himself when the Supreme court threw out the NRA. On that occasion, Mr. Roosevelt made the well remembered remark that the decision had taken us back to "the horse and buggy days."

There followed an uproar by a vocal minority of radicals and persons who claimed to be liberal. They attacked the Supreme court for throwing out New Deal measures, ridiculed the justices as "the nine old men" and proceeded in general to spread poison to all and sundry about the country's judicial system. On top of that came Mr. Roosevelt's speech to congress last month in which he made a virtual demand upon the Supreme court for "a more enlightened interpretation of the Constitution." That was an unprecedented thing but it was not nearly so sensational as the present problem.

Much of the problem that is swirling around the courts of the land results from the position which congress has chosen to take. There are a goodly number of representatives and senators who, swayed by the vocal minority mentioned earlier, have voiced bitter criticisms of the judiciary and have even proposed that its freedom be curbed. They are doing this because they see the Supreme court deciding every now and then that some ill-thought-out piece of legislation should be tossed out of the window. A good many of these congressional shouters have only a slight understanding of the babble that they put out on the floors of the house and senate, but the fact remains they are a part of the congress and hence their words are received with some consideration among those who want to believe the same way.

On the other hand, there are men like Senator Borah of Idaho, who foresee real trouble for all of us if the powers of the courts are curbed. Senator Borah thinks the question of the freedom of the judiciary is a paramount issue and lately has made a powerful appeal that if the people want to make changes in their government, the people ought to do it and not the President and the congress.

The Idaho senator makes the point that only through a judiciary unfettered by politics, free to operate as it sees the law, can the people of the country retain their freedom. If judicial independence goes, liberty goes. So, it seems to me that congress, which just now is the spearhead of the movement to change the power of the courts, ought to recognize its own responsibility.

I said earlier that the courts could not continue long to bear the present burden of attack. That burden which they carry now results largely—and this is especially true of the Supreme court of the United States—from the fact that congress has ceased to be a deliberative body. It has tossed great chunks of undigested legislation at the courts and when the courts have held these laws unconstitutional, a bunch of nitwits each time has unleashed a great howl. It would seem then that the proper conclusion is that the nine old men are not older nor any less enlightened than the members of congress or the executive branches of the government but that especially congress is failing to do its job. It is attempting to read election returns into the judiciary. It seems to me it ought to be remembered by members of congress and officials of the executive branch of the government that each and every one of them has taken an oath as an official of this government to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution and in so doing they must defend the courts.

In any discussion of congress and its activities, I find time to do a little laughing.

Laughs Are Load Today

Through the last several weeks, a period when floods were raging and people were dying, when thousands upon thousands walked the streets without jobs, when other thousands walked the streets because a militant labor leader had called a strike and had permitted his strikers to violate laws of the land by seizure of property—while all of these things were happening, our congress was giving thought to a picaresque proposition. It was discussing a bill providing for alterations of the Capitol building, itself.

The tragedy of this particular thing is that it has a very good chance of being enacted into law before the end of this session. It is proposed to spend four or five million dollars to extend and reconstruct the central portion of the Capitol along lines that would make the three east wings extend the same distance from the main building. It would enlarge the central portion and provide more office space when, as far as any observers can see, there is ample space for all of the offices required now or for the next half century.

I said the tragedy of the thing was that this proposal stands a fair chance of passing through congress. Sponsors of the plan declare it will improve the appearance of the central portion of the old building. It may do that but I have found more architects who disagree than agree with that thought.

As for the office space argument, it would appear that somebody in congress is quite determined simply to spend some more money. It is to be remembered that only two years ago, the house of representatives built a second office building at a cost of $9,000,000 for its members. About the same time, the senate added a wing to the senate office building so that each senator could have three rooms whereas heretofore the average senator had only two rooms in his suite. Committee chairmen always have had three or more rooms. In addition, there are several hundred offices in the Capitol building itself and a goodly number of senators and representatives have private offices in the Capitol as well as in the office buildings. So altogether, I think there is just ground for saying, as one hears said frequently, that the congresses of the last few years much resemble boys who have received too many toys in one delivery. They don't know what to do with themselves.

FROM AROUND MICHIGAN

Lansing.—Contrary to public opinion, the Emergency Relief Commission indicated recently that the automobile strikes had caused but a slight increase in Michigan's welfare burden.

Newberry.—With raw fur prices at the highest level in seven years, trappers are again on the trail of Michigan's fast disappearing fur bearers. Fox, mink and otter are fast reaching extinction and the closing of many areas by the Conservation Department is seen as inevitable.

Pontiac.—Fuzzy, a Persian cat owned by Mrs. John Simon, disdains fish, scorns meat, but dotes on raw potatoes, tomatoes, sweet pickles and bran flakes. The feline vegetarian refuses to touch milk or any other pussy diet when he can spot a raw vegetable. His mistress claims that Fuzzy several times has ripped open a sack of potatoes in quest of a toothsome meal.

East Lansing.—Farmers learned of the arts and wiles of the beauty parlor recently, when Edwin Smiley, Michigan State College herdsman, roped the wildest bull in the college herd and tossed it to the ground for a manicure. He explained that many valuable herd sires, sacrificed prematurely because their hoofs became flattened, could be saved by a hoof trimming.

Clio.—Dinah, 100-pound Great Dane who guards the cream station and poultry farm of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Hardman here, is chicken hearted. A tender guardian, Dinah will overtake a fowl with the wanderlust, pick it up gently in her jaws and bring it back to home territory. Dinah has never yet harmed one of the dozens of chickens who have strayed from the farm.

Bath.—A gasoline engine here recently completed a thirty-year grind and still functions perfectly. Visions of an old-fashioned horseless carriage may be dismissed, as this engine of ancient vintage is used to turn the machinery in the Bath Farmers Elevator. In operation since 1906, it has ground 42,000,000 pounds of grain and has turned the machinery which has cleaned 92,000,000 more pounds.

Jackson.—Successful tests were made recently of the first 4,000 feet of a concrete conduit through which the Grand River will course in this City's business section. WPA workmen are now constructing a second section. The tube is 10 feet high, and the river now has plenty of space for expansion. In the event of a flood, the water will flow over the top of the conduit and down the rip-rapped sides of the old river bed.

Pontiac.—The Biblical admonition that the sins of the father are visited upon the son has no legal standing, according to a court ruling here. A Canadian sought American citizenship. During the proceedings, a relative brought out the fact that the would-be citizen's great grandfather had committed some prank against the law. However, the judge ignored the alleged sins of the applicant's ancestor and granted naturalization.

Ann Arbor.—The University of Michigan, seat of many notable advances in learning, has a new wrinkle in feminine styles. Fad-setting co-eds are wearing shoes to match the snow. Investigation revealed the shoes to be low-heeled white summer oxfords. Further sleuthing brought out the fact that mild winter weather has made crossing of the campus a nautical problem, and the lower-heeled, heavier shoes furnish the needed protection.

Buchanan.—One of the few remaining Michigan orchards of Sheep's Nose or Black Gillyflower apple trees has been chopped down for firewood. The orchard, covering 22 acres, was planted 75 years ago on what is now the F. A. Harrington farm. The Black Gillyflower is a stranger on today's apple market. The fruit has a purple hue and is conical in shape. A protuberance like a lip on the end of the blossom, gave the fruit its odd name, the Sheep's Nose.

Flint.—Recent strike disorders here was old stuff to Sandy, on duty with the Third Squadron, 108th Cavalry, of the Michigan National Guard. Sandy, a chestnut-colored horse with a wise look in his eyes, was born in 1910 and his military record states that he saw active service overseas. In 1920, Sandy was transferred to the National Guard, and has been on duty since. He is afraid of only one thing, thunder, a fear created by the heavy artillery during the World War.

Crosswell.—Does arbutus have an odor? Facing that dilemma, the botany class of Crosswell High School set out on a mid-winter expedition to find the answer. A little animal with a white stripe was spied. One daring student heaved a rock at it. Maybe zoological students would understand, but how could students of botany know anything about species Mephitis Mephitis (more popularly known as skunk)? At any rate, due to the pervasion of a more pungent fragrance, the arbutus hunt was postponed.

LESSON

The conservative battle against F. D. R.'s "subversive supreme court proposals is beautifully and most effectively organized. Financial and industrial big timers spot a golden opportunity to shatter the President's prestige and popularity on this highly emotional issue and they do not intend to miff it.

The boys have learned their November lesson well. They will not repeat the ridiculous mistakes in public relations of the London campaign. There will be no distinguished national committee heading the fight. The Liberty leaguers and "economic royalists" have discovered the value of anonymity. Most especially will there not be a committee of outstanding lawyers "to defend the sanctity of the supreme court"—as was naively suggested by one high-placed New Yorker who should have known better. His more practical associates reminded him that the new dealers might make sweet capital out of the legalistic opposition.

The Liberty league crowd is back of the resistance campaign with a strong concentration of financial and mental resources. But this time the DuPonts and Davises and Raskobas will keep their heads down in the trenches and mobilize indignant average citizens to fight their war in the open.—Lansing State Journal.

CONTENTMENT INSURANCE

"ECONOMY makes happy homes and sound nations, instill it deep." George Washington, the author of the above, realized the satisfaction of both a happy home and a sound nation.

The home, first of all, can be a great source of contentment. Economy does play a prominent part in enabling the members of a family in the home to enjoy it. We suggest that definite plans be followed in the practice of economy by maintaining a Savings Account at the—

WASHINGTON NEWSLETTER

By Congressman Andrew J. Transue
Sixth District, Michigan.

Perseverance Wins
Congress met emergencies with immediate legislation last week while Washington lauded the work of Michigan's Governor Frank Murphy in settling the automobile strike. Long distance cities of the Governor's successful efforts to settle the strike without bloodshed, paid him the tribute of silence by giving up previously scheduled time on the floor of the House of Representatives. There was nothing more for them to say.

Two days before the strike was settled by Governor Murphy your Congressman introduced a resolution for an all-embracing investigation of the industrial calamity.

Overtime Work
Working late both the House of Representatives and the Senate passed the relief deficiency bill that provides $949,000,000 for WPA projects and includes relief for flood victims. The appropriation measure eliminates the use of Government employees by Congressional Committees. In addition to the general relief for flood victims Congress created the Disaster Loan Corporation with $20,000,000 available for rehabilitation loans in the devastated districts.

No Communists
The House of Representatives refused to repeal a law that now prevents teachers in the public schools in the District of Columbia from teaching or advocating communism. While the Senate yielded to the clamor of social groups that claimed the law "insults our teachers" and prevents our children from learning about Russia, the House refused to do more than amend the law by removing the word "teaching". The amendment does not interfere with academic freedom but prevents the use of government money for the purpose of advocating communism.

Trade Treaty
Extension of the President's authority to make reciprocal trade agreements was approved in the House and sent to the Senate last week for concurrent decision. Secretary of State Cordell Hull informed the Senate Finance Committee that the continuance of the reciprocal trade power is a necessary peace measure. Four Congressmen's vote was among the majority of 284 for the bill with 100 against it.

Leisure Begins at 70
Supreme Court Judges were given the same right to retire at the age of 70 that obtains for judges in the lower Federal Courts in a House vote that eliminated party lines, 815 to 74. If the Senate passes the bill Supreme Court Judges will have the option of retiring at full salary. Meanwhile the Supreme Court heard arguments about the Wagoner Labor Act with a decision expected in a few weeks.

Committee Disputes
In Congressional Committee sessions water and rail in arrests clashed about the long and short haul law that prevents railroads from giving reduced rates on long shipments. The Senatorial LaFollette Committee called to compel Robert Pinkerton, head of a large detective agency, to reveal the names of his employees working in the Flint "sit down strike". The Committee will decide this week whether contempt action will be started against Pinkerton, who acted on the advice of his lawyer. He said the information required by the Senate Committee might menace the safety of the private detectives. The committee learned in an earlier session that the General Motors Corporation paid the Pinkerton firm $419,850 in about 30 months.

Right Once
Deep in the files of the Weather Bureau is positive proof that the Weather Man is not always wrong. Back in 1919 the late J. Warren Smith, then head of the weather bureau, warned farmers in the drought and dust storm states against too extensive cultivation and plowing. He said, "plenty of rain encourages extension of cultivation that may be pushed so far in the semiarid district that disaster dips and peaks over the last 60 years in the dust storm area. During the moist years farm plowing is extended and in the dry periods the ground that has been plowed offers no resistance to the wind and dust storms."

Father - Daughter
Tallulah Bankhead, stage and motion picture stars was a visitor at a House session last week and saw her father William B. Bankhead, Speaker of the House, bang his gavel. Her father caught her act at a Washington theatre that night. Each said the other's performance was good.

PARTY EATABLES TASTIER IF UNIQUE

No need to dish up all the food in house when guests drop in formally, says Miss Beatrice Grant, assistant professor of foods and nutrition at Michigan State College. "When Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt served ham sandwiches at an inaugural tea she set the fashion for simplicity and informality in foods," Miss Grant says.

"Instead of serving a great variety of foods, the clever woman offers only a few, but dramatizes one main food especially. When this is done correctly, the food service becomes a part of the entertainment, in effect, and makes the party or informal gathering more of a success

Three unusual dishes suggested by Miss Grant include orange-nut bread tomato bread and shrimp creole. Each one is considered sufficient in itself to need but little else to accompany it to the buffet service or for individual plate lunches.

Linens and china, let the men scoff if they will, mean a lot to women gathered for bridge or an organization meeting which is followed by a light lunch. So Miss Grant suggests that although simplicity in table decorations goes with the style simplicity in the foods served, attention to make them attractive is worth the time of planning and arranging.

NEW YEAR'S PRODUCTION HIGH

A year ago the month of January started out with an increased production of milk over the previous month by the farmer's producing milk for the Detroit market.

According to the Federal Milk Administrator in charge of the marketing pool for the Detroit area, in spite of increased feed costs, the producers have continued to produce a normal supply or a slight increase. During January, 1937, 57,683,495 pounds of milk was produced, which is only 431,005 pounds over a year ago for the same month. Of this amount 41,316,020 pounds was base milk for which the farmers received $2.20 per cwt, f. o. b. Detroit; 6,367,475 pounds was surplus milk above the base, for which the producers received $1.37 per cwt, f. o. b. the local receiving station.

The total volume of milk shipped was disposed of as follows: 34,528,047 pounds of class 1 @ $2.48 delivered Detroit; Class 3A 9,063,152 pounds @ $1.37; Class 3B 14,092,296 pounds @ $1.50 Milk in the last two named classes is milk used for manufacturing, and is quoted f. o. b. local receiving station.

According to these figures, production has increased 3.3% over December, while fluid sales increased only .8%. One of the more important problems confronting the producers now is to increase the sale of fluid milk. According to past records of the Michigan Milk Producers Association, production has gradually increased over the past four years but during this period there has been very little change in the sale of fluid milk (bottle milk).

WHAT THE "BUMPS" ON YOUR HEAD DON'T MEAN

An article in the American Weekly with the February 21 issue of the Detroit Sunday Times reveals that many supposedly intelligent people still believe in the long exploded idea that the shape of your head have anything to do with the quality of your brain.

EFFECTIVE USE OF SWEET CLOVER

An experiment with the effect of the time of plowing under sweet clover has offered information valuable to bean growers and may be useful to farmers who grow other crops. At Michigan State College fields of sweet clover were plowed under, portions in stripes Nov. 15, other plots May 15 and another portion May 31. In dry years it has been found that only half as much yield in beans obtained from plowing in May in comparison to fields plowed earlier. The clover fails to rot in late plowing when there is lack of moisture in the soil. Thus it neither adds plant food to the seed-bed nor will it offer enough humus to help the soil hold moisture needed for crop maturity in dry weather.

CONSERVATION DEPT. NOTES

A racket is being worked in which the name of the conservation department is being used. Certain salesmen are asking sportsmen for subscriptions to magazines stating the funds will go to the conservation department. The department wishes to announce that it has not endorsed any magazine whatever.

There are now about 300 fishing shanties on the ice of Lake Charlevoix near Boyre City. They are called Smelt City.

Fish have no external ears and cannot hear most sounds outside of water.

Geologists say that there has been some gold found in Michigan but that no commercial production of gold has been found outside of the Ishpeming area. Nearly all samples sent to them by people of this state have proved to be pyrite or fool's gold.

Additional settlements with state license agents have boosted the number of deer licenses sold in 1936 to 129,156.

Although the tax moratorium still continues in Michigan, it is illegal to remove timber from tax delinquent lands until all tax installments have been paid.

The development of the Tahquamenon Falls area will be started this week. Roads will be built and parking and camping sites built.

Hunters and trappers in Michigan eliminated 157 more predatory animals in January. There were 75 bobcats and 82 coyotes.

13 dead and 12 wounded was the accident report during the small game hunting season which ended Jan. 31. During the deer season 13 hunters were killed and 11 wounded. This makes a total of 26 dead and 30 wounded.

More than a dozen cases of tularemia in human beings was reported in Michigan since Dec. 1, 1936. Very few Michigan rabbits were found to be infected and it is thought the disease came from rabbits shipped in from the southwest.

The elk herd in the Pigeon River district is now said to number 400. 1,755 wells are now producing oil or gas in commercial quantities in Michigan. 1,360 are oil wells and 395 gas wells.

Bob Fortney, sup. of the Paris fish hatchery has developed a new type of trout fly. It is known as the Bob Fortney Fly and will be on sale this year.

Dope of ruffed grouse and prairie chickens is being collected by CCC workers in the Pigeon River District. The birds are live trapped, banded and released.

A Michigan beaver weighing 76 pounds was captured recently. This is unusually heavy for Michigan beavers.

Many bills affecting the conservation department have been introduced in the present legislature. One would take 15c from the license fee for game bird propagation. Another would raise the non-resident small game license from $5 to $15. Another provides for hunting deer any sex in even numbered years, several would prohibit Sunday hunting in various counties another would stop the use of nets or seines in fishing in certain waters, another would cloth all township supervisors with conservation enforcement powers.

By constant practice at speed and accuracy Michigan's forest-fire organization has been able to reduce the time between "spotting" cross-shooting, reporting and dispatching crews to forest fires to three minutes.

The more one studies accident statistics and records, the more puzzling they become.

Comparatively few accidents occur at points where dangers are easily recognized by the driver. This is true even though the danger may be unusually pronounced. For example, traveling over a narrow, winding, mountain road is as a rule comparatively safe for here the motorist usually takes extraordinary precaution.

On the other hand a great many accidents may occur under safe conditions because the motorist, lulled by a sense of false security, lets down his guard for the time being and forgets all about safety.

A car inspected often means a hazard corrected.

I must employ at once a man living in small town or on farm. Permanent work. Must be satisfied with earning $75 a month at first. Address Box 7459, care of this paper.

BUY '37 PLATES TOURISTS ADVISED

Automobile owners planning to drive into other states with 1936 plates still in use, are cautioned by Leon D. Case, Secretary of State, that they may inconvenience themselves. Relatively few states of the union have extended the time for use of 1936 plates to Michigan's deadline, Feb. 28, and in other states motorists whose cars carry 1936 plates may be stopped after the dead lines in such states.

The Department of State has notified appropriate officials of every state in the union and province of Canada, of the current extension, but this is no guarantee that every enforcement officer concerned, may remember this date. Legally, Michigan 1936 plates are "good" anywhere in the nation or in Canada, as long as they are "good" in Michigan; reciprocal agreements are in force between the states and provinces.

Following are the deadlines for use of 1936 plates in a few nearby states, according to latest information sent the Department of State: Illinois, Jan. 31; Indiana, Dec. 31; 1936; Ohio, March 31; Wisconsin, March 15. The final date in Ontario was Jan. 31, 1937, for no extension was granted.

Household Questions

When serving pickled onions use sugar tongs instead of a fork. It is easier to get them out of the jar.

A little sweet oil applied to bronzes after they are dusted, followed by a brisk rubbing with a chamois skin will bring out their rich tones.

When broiling a steak, cut off excess fat around edge to prevent it from catching fire when placed below glowing fire.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!
Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feet tired, nervous, all worn out. Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed by the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

"I'm afraid, Doctor Marden," Patrick said his last word, "I shall have to ask you not to leave the Head until I give you permission."

"I give you my word I shall not leave it."

"Well, Mary," Patrick said in a weary tone. "It all makes sense. Here we have a perfect design—Torrano first, Margaret next, then Marden. No one of them seems to have told anything but the truth. They're all dying to tell the truth. If somebody would only lie, maybe I could get the answer. Of course Margaret said she thought she heard something stirring in the bushes. Marden apparently noticed nothing like that. Now there may have been another person involved or any number. For that matter, Margaret Fairweather may have returned and—Oh, I don't know who killed Ace Blaikie. I'm no nearer knowing than I was Saturday. Who's that?"

Vaguely in the back of my mind I had heard Doctor Marden drive off. In the back of my mind I heard a second motor turn into the drive. It stopped. Presently a light, swift step came through the hall and into the living room—a light, swift step—strangely stiffened by determination.

"I've come back to tell you the rest of my story, Mr. O'Brien," said Myron Marden. "I haven't told you all of it yet!"

Involuntarily we all three sat down.

"I will begin it by telling you," Doctor Marden took up the story in the quietest voice I had ever heard from him, "something that will, I think, come as a great surprise to you." He paused as though to summon his strength for the revelation. "Ace Blaikie is the father of my granddaughter Caro Prentiss."

He paused again as though for a question or comment from us.

But neither Patrick nor I spoke. We did not stir. His statement had worked too great a paralysis for us either to speak or move.

"I'll have to go back of course to tell you how it came about. I will begin with my own marriage. My wife was a New York woman. When I met her, about forty years ago, she was a widow. She had been widowed twice and both times under tragic conditions. Her first husband, Theodore Prentiss, also a New Yorker, was thrown from his horse a month after their marriage. He died instantly. She became the mother of his posthumous child—a boy, Theodore Prentiss. Five years later, she married again—Addison Dacre. He too was a New Yorker. While they were traveling in France, he died in Paris of a case of pneumonia. She was pregnant at the time and the shock brought on the premature birth of a little girl who was to be named Eleanor Dacre. I was established as a physician in Paris and I was called in on the case. This was immediately after the funeral—I never met Addison Dacre.

"Mrs. Dacre was a beautiful woman—a very lovely woman. I felt that if the child died, her very reason would go. I threw myself heart and soul into saving that premature little waif—and I did save her. I took care of her for months. Of course that constant attendance brought Mrs. Dacre and me very close. By the time Eleanor was a year old, we realized that life meant nothing to either of us without the other. Six months later we were married quietly in Paris. My practice was there and we have lived in Paris, except for our holidays, ever since. My wife died two years ago and, after I had a little recovered from my grief, I decided to return to America. But I am running ahead of my story. I must go back to Eleanor.

"There could not possibly ever have lived a more lovely child than Eleanor. And when I use the word 'lovely,' I use it advisedly. She was lovely in face and figure; lovely in heart and spirit. I adored her.

"A beautiful child, Eleanor grew to be a beautiful woman. I do not think that this is prejudice. Everywhere, her appearance made a sensation. That was not entirely due to her beauty perhaps. It was partly her coloring. It was the most delicate blonde I have ever seen—ethereal. Often Mrs. Marden and I discussed the proper adjective to apply to Eleanor. She was not angelic nor seraphic nor cherubic. She was too tall to be fairy-like. She was sprite-like. Her hair was the palest gold, her features what we used to call mignonette, her eyes deeply violet.

"The French always stared at her and in Spain and Italy she created such a sensation that she did not like to go out on the street alone. She had courage enough, but she hated the little incidents which occurred here and there along the way. I will not say that Eleanor was an angel, although she was a kind of modern angel. She was too vigorous to suggest that sort of thing. But she was absolutely honest. She was sweet.

She was kind. We worshiped her—my wife and I."

Doctor Marden came to a full stop. He put his hand over his eyes and sank back into the past. Presently with a deep sigh he emerged into the present again.

"When the war came, I enlisted as a volunteer in the French medical service. I will say here that we are a medical family, so to speak. Before the war was over, there were a half dozen Mardens working in France. When the United States came in, I was transferred to the American service."

He paused and looked inquiringly at Patrick. Patrick nodded. He did not speak. I knew that no more than I would he have interrupted the flow of that story.

Doctor Marden went on. "My wife threw herself into war work too. For four years she worked daily at the American Ambulance in Neuilly. Eleanor—perhaps now I had better tell you about Eleanor—"

"Eleanor was a natural nurse. She never took a course in nursing, but I taught her everything I knew. She volunteered when I did and the French sent her to the hospital at Courcy-sur-Seine. She stayed there for about a year. I saw her only at irregular intervals.

I had an occasional permission from the front and then she and my wife and I would try to manage a reunion at our home in Paris. But I did not see much of Eleanor during the first months of the war. I went through what many husbands were going through in France then. I saw my wife getting more and more fatigued—nervously exhausted. But Eleanor stood up to it marvelously. But every time I saw her, it seemed to me that she had become more of a woman, more and more beautiful. Then Ace Blaikie appeared in her life."

Again Doctor Marden came to a pause and now he did not cover his face with his hands. He presented, unscreened, the hard bitter eyes, the tight-shut lips; the setness of every line and curve.

"I know that you, Mrs. Avery, are acquainted with the factors of Ace Blaikie's war experience because I've heard you discuss them so often."

"And besides," I reminded him, "my husband was in France."

"Well then, I will merely say that it was while he was in the Foreign Legion that he met Eleanor. It seemed to have been a case of love at first sight. Certainly with Eleanor. And as she afterward told me, Doctor Blaikie said it was so with him. But when it comes to Doctor Blaikie and love—"

The expression on Doctor Marden's face deepened so horribly that it was as though the blood behind the flesh had turned to ink. For a moment the term my husband used to use in regard to boxing and boxers came into my mind—fighting face.

"He did not know really what love was. On that side he was not man but beast. At any rate they met as often as his permissions and hers allowed. What happened of course was that Ace Blaikie discovered that in order to possess my daughter, he must offer her marriage. Understand—" Doctor Marden's voice shot to us a peremptory order. "Understand that this was not a subject that Eleanor would discuss with any man. He had to learn that—to sense it. And he was apparently extremely acute in sensing the reactions of the other sex. At any rate they were married secretly. That was before the United States came in. It was in the summer of 1915. I will not go into all the ins and outs of this. I will say only that marriage in France is a very complicated matter. Ace Blaikie had made friends with a French officer who had a long pull. He fixed it so that Ace and Eleanor were married secretly.

"Presently Eleanor found herself pregnant. She told me afterward that there was nothing in the world she wanted so much as to bear a child. It was several months after this discovery before she saw Ace Blaikie. At their first meeting, she told him that she was going to make their marriage public. She could see, as she told me subsequently, that Ace Blaikie was appalled at this discovery. He tried to get her to withdraw from the hospital and go to America. And if not to America, to Italy or Spain. Eleanor steadily refused. Finally, she told him if he gave her no help, she must apply to me—that the marriage must be announced. Thereupon, he told her that she was, in reality, not married at all. That, a few years before, he had secretly married in the United States an actress by the name of Drina Demoyne."

"Drina Demoyne!" I interrupted. "I've seen Drina Demoyne. Why, what was it I read about her just the other day? She died recently."

"Yes," Doctor Marden answered.

"Her death has a great bearing on this story. That revelation of Ace Blaikie's was really Eleanor's death warrant. She never saw him again. But she communicated with me once. I got a permission and came back from the front. She told me the whole story. My wife and I had but one idea—to save Eleanor's reputation. Now it happened that my wife's son by her first marriage, Theodore Prentiss, was living during the war in a remote village in southern France. He volunteered for both the French and American armies. But he had always been an invalid and could not be used either as a soldier or in any civilian capacity. He was married and his wife was pregnant. I sent Eleanor to them. My step-son's wife died bringing a dead child into the world. Theodore survived her only six months. In the meantime, Eleanor bore a perfectly healthy baby whom she named Caroline after my wife. This was the Caro whom you know. Before he died, Theodore suggested a plan. We carried it out. We registered her in the Marie de Laitry as Caroline Blaikie. We registered her under that name as an American citizen, with the consul of Versailles. I can show you that she bears that name on her passport. But we told all her friends in Paris and have told them ever since that she was Theodore's child. As soon as I could get leave, I took my wife and daughter to Spain."

He paused. For an instant he bit his lower lip as though to fang out of it the emotion which made it tremble.

"There my daughter killed herself."

Neither Patrick nor I made comment. He himself made no further comment. "When we returned to Paris, however, there was never any question of Eleanor's not being Theodore Prentiss's child—Caroline Prentiss. And so she grew up. She has no more idea of her relationship to Ace than you had before I told you this story. As she is a minor, I got her passport. She has never seen it.

"Concealing her real name from Caro has been one of the minor troubles of my life. But I've accomplished it. I brought her up in Paris, as you know. But as she grew older, I wondered about her forbears in America. I knew that people thought of Ace Blaikie as a rich man. I knew that he had property in Satuit, Massachusetts. I began to wonder if, as he grew older, he would not want his only child—if only child she were—to inherit that property. At first I put this thought out of my mind. But it kept recurring. It troubled me. I finally found it was keeping me awake nights. Sleepless nights began to recur a little too often. I made inquiries and found that Ace Blaikie was not only accepted as a bachelor but that nobody knew that he had ever been married. Ultimately I decided to come to the United States, to establish myself at Satuit. It made things easy for me because I had never met Ace Blaikie. In the war somebody started calling Eleanor 'Sister Dora,' after an old novel, the heroine of which was a nurse. I confess I have never read it. Ace Blaikie never called her anything but Sister Dora. Although Eleanor's name was Dacre, the name of Marden might of course linger in Ace Blaikie's mind. Still, as I said before, there had been at least half a dozen physicians named Marden working in Paris during the war. Last spring, as you both know, I came here to Satuit. I met Ace Blaikie socially, of course, although I made no effort to meet him. Caro's name was neither his nor mine. If the coincidence of a physician from Paris by the name of Marden gave him pause, he did not let me know it. He may have thought of me only as one of the Marden connection in Paris.

"In the meantime I studied my man. I found that he was engaged to be married to a beautiful, charming and estimable young girl. That girl became Caro's most devoted friend. I confess to you I did not know what to do. If he married, Ace Blaikie was likely to leave children. In the matter of inheritance, his legitimate heirs would of course take precedence over Caro. And the last thing in the world I wanted—for Caro's sake—was a scandal. I let the summer drift by in a welter of indecision."

"He paused again and seemed reminiscently to survey that long direful period. Then he took up his story again.

Being Afraid of the Dark

By Andrey C. Hayden

AS FAR back as I can remember I never was afraid of the dark. When I became a mother, I believed that there was no reason why any child should be afraid, and that if fear were never suggested in connection with darkness, it wouldn't occur to the child to be afraid. Darkness is a natural phenomenon, I reasoned, and one of which babies are not afraid.

Applying this theory, all went well with my own little girl, until something unfortunate happened. Either someone complimented my little three-year-old on her bravery, shown in going up to bed alone, or someone told an alarming story, or someone—well, no matter I don't know how it happened. This I do know: Jane began to say she was afraid of the dark—that frogs would get her.

Believe Fear Is Expected.

Now I really believe that most cases of fear of the dark on the part of children have no deep-rooted reason. When there is such a reason, it can be found, of course very careful consideration should be given to reconditioning. But most children fear the dark because they have somehow imbibed the idea that it is rather expected of them—that if they are not afraid they are very brave, but if they are afraid it is nothing to be wondered at. The child having acquired the fear, there are two popular methods for exercising it. One is to attempt to get back to the original cause and explain that away; the second to overcome it by setting up artificial bravery.

I tried to reason with Jane, and showed her pictures of frogs to let her see how small they are, and also made a lot of "brave talk" about "a great big girl like you." But my efforts had no effect. Jane just cried and clung to my dress, and pulled me along with her to bed or the bathroom. She wasn't brave and wasn't going to be talked into it.

It seemed best to accede quietly. I took her to the bathroom and to bed for two or three weeks, and I did it as a matter of course. I made it a point, also, to walk from room to room without a light as soon as she was in bed. After going downstairs I would come up on an imaginary errand, and walk about again in the darkness. On several occasions, a little before bedtime, we took walks together, and sometimes we went down cellar in the dark, but always without any mention of its being dark.

When she spoke of frogs I said yes, I could see them too—that it was fun to be able to imagine things, wasn't it? And the best part was that since they weren't real, you could stop imagining them whenever you wanted to. Darkness Is Ordinary Condition.

Then one day I felt very ill and spent the day lying on the couch. When night came and Jane wanted to go to the bathroom I called her over and said, "Now, Jane, Mother is sick, so you will have to go alone." And she said, "Yes." "It will be dark in there, do you understand? And I cannot come in if you call me to turn on the light," I explained. She thought a minute and then said, "All right." When bedtime came, I undressed her and sent her up to bed alone, and then casually sent another member of the family up on an errand. Jane had the idea, though, that I was sending her alone to bed, and that the company and the light were merely incidental.

The next night I went to the bathroom, ostensibly to get something, making it appear accidental that I went when Jane was there. Then I sent her off to bed alone, casually. The next night I sent her to the bathroom and to bed in the dark without comment, and it has been a regular occurrence ever since. Did we get at the root of the trouble? That's hard to say since I never found out the beginning of the fear, but—we made the dark into a very ordinary, matter-of-fact condition. —National Kindergarten Ass'n.
